Hoover Invites Roosevelt
A River Turned Aside
Who Killed Miss Merrill?
One Night to Florida
——By Arthur Brisbane——

MIAMI, FLA., Nov. 15—President Hoover has invited Governor Roosevelt, who will be President next March, to the White House to discuss foreign loans and unite in a recommendation to Congress. This interesting invitation is absolutely new in American politics.

In view of the long, and at this time unnecessarily long, interval between election and actual inauguration, it would seem that the President-to-be and the President might well consult frequently for the good of the country.

To run one kind of administration without modification up to March 4 and suddenly break into another set of ideas seems scarcely desirable. It would not be done in any other business.

On the other hand it is conceivable that Governor Roosevelt may want to keep his hands and mind clear of any agreement while studying problems, reserving definite action until his term begins.

Governor Roosevelt's attitude on foreign debts, his willingness or unwillingness to transfer the load from the shoulders of Europe to the shoulders of American taxpayers, is not known.

But it is known that at least 90 per cent of our people see no good reason why they should pay in taxes the debts that the people of other countries incurred directly or indirectly and spent in the big war.

If Governor Roosevelt acted merely as a politician, which is not his habit, he would say, regardless of his own views on foreign debts, "let President Hoover add this to his other worries. There is no reason why I should step in and make recommendations that might cause my administration to begin in public disfavor."

On the site of the great Hoover dam, the Colorado river for ages has rushed with its millions of gallons per minute through the high rock walls of a narrow canyon. It follows that path no longer, for man's engineering genius has turned the river aside, forcing it to run through an artificial tunnel, dug in one of the canyon's rocky sides, almost a mile high.

Where the river once rushed through a channel cut out of solid rock by the water ages ago, everything is dry. Engineers and workers at the great dam, undisturbed by the torrent, will proceed to erect a wall that will hold back billions of gallons of Colorado waters, to be used as man may decide, for irrigation or power. When the wall is finished the tunnel will be closed, to open at any time when ease behind the dam needs lowering.

The gloomy should be encouraged by this "incident" in modern engineering. Turning aside one of the world's great rivers, man provides, in one year's work, a channel of solid rock that nature's power could not have carved out in less than many centuries.

The thing is supposed to have been done long ago in Mesopotamia, when a great king, according to one story, wanted to take his soldiers across the river bed, dry shod, to attack a city. According to another story, he wanted vengeance on the river for having drowned his favorite horse. But that meant only digging a trench; no rocky canyon there.

You might consider this question:

If man, only 12,000 years from the late Stone Age and the sharpened flint, can turn the course of a river, fly through the clouds and travel under the sea, why will he do 12,000 years hence and 12,000,000 years hence?

Science proves that the life of the earth, warmed by the sun, will last hundreds of millions of years longer. Plenty of time for good work.

Men turn a great river from its course now! And build sea walls that stop the ocean. In Holland they have recently taken thousands of acres from the sea and made them into farms. The future will see a race of flying men, living on high hills and mountain tops, diverting the intense heat of the equator toward the poles, as the Colorado river is diverted, regulating the temperature, atmosphere and winds of this planet as easily as the temperature is regulated in a modern hotel.

"It hath not yet been shewn what we shall be." That is no exaggeration.

Edgar Allan Poe should be alive in Natchez, Miss., to write about the strange murder of an old lady, Miss Jane Surget Merrill. At the entrance to her ancient plantation, near Natchez, in Mississippi, she kept posted a sign, "Visitors Not Welcome."

There are many visitors now; the railroad has put in a siding to carry travelers from all over the South, hurrying to the scene of a most strange crime.

Miss Merrill, 72 years old, who lived alone in her father's house,

South End Hunger Tragedy Bares Aristocrat Wife

The secret, which Lillian Poole had carried to her death in a shabby South End room, escaped from the morgue today to link her with a background of Virginian aristocracy and wealth.

They found Lillian Poole dead from lack of nourishment, her husband barely alive nearby, too weak to aid her or summon help through four long days after she had passed into the beyond.

But today the Boston Evening American learned that she was not so poor as she was proud, not so destitute as she was loyal to the man she loved.

For Mrs. Poole, who had died amid poverty and want, was a descendant of one of the first families of Virginia—the famous F. F. V's.

FINDS HER DAUGHTER

She was the owner of a tobacco plantation and possessor of a $50,000 trust fund.

She was the daughter of Gen. Henry Meath, who led a Confederate division through the entire war to Appomattox, the later served as adviser to General Grant, his erstwhile enemy, on Indian affairs.

And in a little town in New Hampshire the Boston Evening American learned that her daughter by her first marriage, Virginia Miles, 15, who will come to Boston tomorrow to see her mother in death.

Education—the dead woman had the best. Social training—she was brought up in the drawing rooms of Virginia and Washington. Wealth—she had sufficient.

TOO POOR TO TELL

But she had divorced her husband and married a man who worked with his hands. And in her pride she would not tell her family. In her loyalty to him, she would not tell, for fear she would be torn from his side by the lever of wealth.

William Poole, 65, more than 15 years older than his wife, lies in City Hospital today, slowly recovering and not even aware yet that she is dead.

The background of his dead comrade, which contrasts so strangely with the tawdry surroundings that were hers in the last months of her life, with Poole tramping the streets seeking work, was revealed through Robert Tobin of Tolman st., Dorchester.

"I read of Mrs. Poole's death in the American," said Tobin. "I remembered her right away. She used to come into a place where I once worked, a fine lady, as her husband was a fine man.

FEARED PAUPER'S GRAVE

"I was afraid she would be put in a pauper's grave, and I knew she deserved and could have far better than that.

"I told Dr. Leary, the medical examiner, that letters in her belongings would reveal she was of a famous Virginia family."

LIBBY FREED OF MURDER CHARGE

Cases Against Beautiful Torch Singer and Ab Walker Nolle Prossed by State Officials

Winston-Salem, N. C., Nov. 15 (INS)—The State of North Carolina today not prossed murder charges against Libby Holman Reynolds, beautiful widow of Zachary Smith Reynolds, and Ab Walker, 19-year-old secretary and chum of the young tobacco millionaire, who died of a mysterious bullet wound in the head on his estate here last June.

State Solicitor Carlisle Higgins appeared in Forsythe County Superior Court shortly before noon and, in a brief prepared statement, asked the court to dismiss the charges.

The request was immediately granted by Judge A. M. Stack.

Mr. Higgins, in asking that the murder indictments be not pressed, reserved the right to reopen the case at any time in the future that evidence might be sufficient to support a possible conviction against the former Broadway night singer and the Winston-Salem youth.

Neither defendant appeared in court. Libby is living in seclusion, awaiting approaching motherhood. Walker also was absent. Both have been at liberty under bonds of $25,000 since their indictment.

The solicitor's action, in effect, simply meant removal of the case from the court calendar and an indefinite postponement of the trial. Both defendants may be brought to trial at any time the prosecutor decides evidence is sufficient to support the charges and the court sets a trial date.

In announcing the decision Solicitor Carlisle Higgins said:

"After careful investigation in this case in which the defendants are under indictment for murder, I am thoroughly satisfied that we have not sufficient evidence to justify the case in going to trial. I am authorized to say that Sheriff Transon and Assistant Solicitor Eric McMichael, both of whom have made careful investigations, concur in this opinion."

Reynolds' Tragedy Climax to Gay Party

Winston-Salem, Nov. 15 (AP)—Smith Reynolds was carried to a hospital from his home in Winston-Salem last July 6, a pistol wound in his head. He died shortly afterward.

Most all of the principals in the case, house-party guests, said they were convinced that the fatal wound was self-inflicted, but several circumstances made officials dubious.

Mrs. Reynolds said that the gun with which Reynolds was killed in a second search they found it on the floor near a door where they felt it should have been easily found the first time. They found blood on a towel in the bathroom.

A nurse said that she found Walker and Mrs. Reynolds struggling on a floor in a room of the hospital while Reynolds' wounds were being treated in another room. The nurse quoted Mrs. Reynolds as saying:

"Oh, my baby, my baby. Don't you know I'm going to have a baby?"

Walker was held as a material witness. The coroner's jury found that Reynolds came to his death at the hand of "a party or parties unknown."

On August 4 a grand jury indicted Mrs. Reynolds and Walker on charges of murder. They were arraigned and released on bail of $25,000.

U. S. AGENTS PROBE TALE OF ROBINS KILLING

Report of Slaying at Sea Is Linked With Slaying of Dry Agent in Big Brewery Raid

Robert J. Coyne, chief special agent of the Department of Justice in this section, made an official investigation today of the story told Boston police about the murder at sea of the missing Col. Raymond Robbins, dry crusader and close friend of President Hoover, the Boston Evening American learned.

Coyne made a partial report to his superiors in Washington after questioning individuals connected with the case of Ralph J. Colt, Maxwell st., Dorchester, alleged swindler and reported relator of the story.

One man who was questioned by police before they arrested Code there was connected with a raid of boom in Florida in the same section in which Col. Robins had exposed huge sums alleged to have been accepted by federal agents.

This, it is believed, may possibly have provided a channel through which Code learned of the fate of Col. Robins, the implacable enemy of rum runners and all kinds of racketeers.

LINKED TO SLAYING

Investigators assigned by Chief Agent Coyne were making a further check of this angle this afternoon.

Meanwhile federal agents in New York, seizing upon the story told here that Col. Robins had been slain at sea, were linking his death with the slaying of Prohibition Agent John V. Finiello in a politically protected brewery in Elizabeth, N. J., two years ago.

Col. Robins, the government sleuth whose life had been valued at a fund of $100,000 which the underworld had raised to save the alleged slayers of Finiello, and was about to tell President Hoover of the intended use of part of this fund in the prohibition department.

It was slain as the federal investigators now picture it, just as the chief government witness in this murder case, August Goebel, was slain by gangsters last week.

KNEW TOO MUCH

The two men accused of the murder of Finiello had to be saved at all costs, for they knew too much about underworld killings, and about underworld protection from politicians.

The story of Col. Robins—the bare story that he was trussed up and tossed alive into the sea three days after his disappearance, while on his way to see the President—was told Boston police yesterday by Carlisle O Byrd of New York.

Byrd said he had the story from Code, who is charged with engineering a high-powered swindle on Byrd and others including Prof. Augustus Gill of Technology.

While Code was denying having told the Robins story, Edmund H. Noyes of the Prince George Hotel, New York was declaring today that Code told him that same story two months ago.

Noyes claims to be one of Code's victims, but Code says he worked for Noyes. The latter took little stock in the Robins story. That is the attitude of Boston police officials. But federal authorities have another view.

"FANTASTIC TALE"

"Yes, Code told me that Robins story two months ago, but I didn't pay any attention to it," said Noyes. "To me the whole case is just a shrewd scheme embellished by a fantastic story."

Another individual whom Code induced to invest money in his enterprise is said to have been Joseph Bloom of Roxbury, a brother of

UNITED FRUIT STEAMER KILLS MAN VANISHES

Vernon W. Cooch, 54, of Wakefield, an official of the United Fruit Co., disappeared in New York on Nov. 5, according to word from that city today.

Relatives, who requested the New York and Massachusetts police to hunt for the missing man, reported that he had been in ill health for several months. He had been stationed in the tropics for some time and suffered a nervous collapse on his return.

Gooch vanished after checking out at the Hotel Pennsylvadia on election day. He had been at the hotel for a week and had made arrangements to stay for some time on a weekly basis.

He was understood to have $500 on his person. He has been connected with the United Fruit Company for 25 years and had been granted a leave of absence because of illness. He was a bachelor.

The police describe him as five two inches tall, weight 115 pounds, mixed gray hair, brown eyes, ruddy complexion, wears glasses and has a noticeable scar on his neck. When last seen he wore a blue suit with pencil stripe and a dark overcoat.

Hearst Writer's Aid Freed Libby Holman

It was an investigation conducted by Joseph Cowan, reporter of the New York Evening Journal, the results of which were published exclusively in the Boston Evening American, that led to the freeing of Libby Holman Reynolds on the murder charge today.

Cowan's inquiry on the scene of the shooting, covered every angle of the case. It showed, as Evening American readers know, that the case against the Broadway torch singer was flimsy and that she would surely be acquitted, if not exonerated, in advance of trial.

STEAM KILLS BABY IN CRIB

Her terrier wailing monotonity in the darkness early today awakened Mrs. Edward Simpson in her home, 165 Worcester st., Watertown.

She recognized it as the cry of a dog that senses the presence of death and, rushing to an upstairs bedroom, she found her 19-months-old son, Everett, suffocated by steam in his crib. The steam was escaping from a radiator from which she had removed a valve in order to get more warmth. Three other children slept, unharmed, in nearby rooms.

Britain Waits News of Amy Johnson

London, Nov. 15 (INS)—Britain today anxiously awaited news of Amy Johnson, flying to Capetown in an effort to beat the speed mark set up by her husband, Capt. James A. Mollison, transatlantic flier.

Mrs. Mollison left Oran at 11:30 p. m. yesterday, planning to make Niamey, French West Africa, a distance of 1550 miles, in one hop.

HOOVER SPEEDS PLANS TO CONSULT ROOSEVELT

PRESIDENT IN WASHINGTON TOMORROW

Official Comment on Acceptance of the Invitation Is Meantime Withheld

(By The Associated Press.)

Official silence has settled in world capitals pending the significant meeting soon to come between President Hoover and President-elect Roosevelt on European petitions looking toward prolongation of the moratorium and war debt revision.

Belgium today joined Great Britain and France in communicating its views to this country. The text was withheld temporarily at Washington—possibly pending the arrival of the President from the West tomorrow.

He on the speeding train and Mr. Roosevelt in Albany prepared for their meeting, expected early next week.

Members of Congress back at their Washington desks continued private discussions on the situation, there being no indications of change from the attitude of opposition to revision that was expressed by resolution last year.

State department officials kept their views to themselves, the position being taken that Mr. Hoover alone can state the administration position as of the present.

On Board the Presidential Special En Route to Washington, Nov. 15—President Hoover today formulated plans for his now-assured war-debt talk with Franklin D. Roosevelt but as his train headed into the final lap of its transcontinental run he was silent regarding the policies upon which he will seek the President-elect's co-operation.

One of the Chief Executive's aides said today that unless word of some new development was receiving he expected Mr. Hoover would have nothing to say publicly on debt matters during the da... He is scheduled to reach Washington at 8:30 a. m. tomorrow.

Before 9 o'clock this morning at St. Louis, a delegation of about two-score political and personal friends of the President boarded the train and were received by him in the parlor car during a brief stop.

VISITORS ON TRAIN

Included in the group were Mayor Victor J. Miller, E. R. Clements, Democratic committeeman from Missouri, and Henry Kiel, defeated Republican candidate for the Senate from Missouri. They reported Mr. Hoover confined his talk to them principally to personal affairs.

One of Mr. Hoover's secretaries said today that the President was pleased at Roosevelt's acceptance of his invitation to a White House conference, and was entirely willing that the time of the parley be made to suit the latters convenience.

The New York governor's telegram was placed aboard the train at Hutchinson, Kan., last night, shortly after 5 p. m. No official comment was forthcoming upon it.

DEBT ALTERNATIVES

There are three alternatives to extension of the moratorium—payment by the respective nations of their interest due after Secretary of the Treasury Mills has relieved them of meeting the immediate principal payment, outright default, or payment of the Dec. 15 installment in full.

Under a clause in the last debt agreement, the executive branch of the Government may suspend principal payments without recourse to Congress. Great Britain, applying for extension of the moratorium, owes $95,000,000 the middle of next month. Two-thirds of this is interest and must be paid unless Britain chooses to admit her inability to pay.

Several of the minor European nations already have defaulted.

McAdoo Says Time for Europe to Pay

Los Angeles, Nov. 15 (AP)—William Gibbs McAdoo, Senator-elect from California, declared in a statement, that "the proposals of Great Britain and France for a postponement of the debt payments due the United States should be rejected promptly.

"The whole matter", he said, "must be dealt with by the incoming Democratic administration, which has a direct mandate from the American people on the subject of foreign debts."

U. S. Being "Put on the Spot" on Debts, Is Berlin's View

Berlin, Nov. 15 (US)—The German Government today was officially "not interested" in the British and French notes to America on reconsideration of war debts, but the German press saw the notes as a move putting the American taxpayer "on the spot."

The government, through an unofficial spokesman, was said to view the debt question as not concerning Germany, even though the Lausanne reparations settlement will be merely an empty gesture by the European World War allies unless the United States foots the bill. A government official declares:

"So far as we are concerned, the reparations question is definitely settled."

The newspaper Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung, however, commented:

"The French note again shows France a double winner by the world crisis.

"She motivates a moratorium plea with the world crisis, which has hit her least of all countries.

"She calls war debts 'resentments,' which evidently is a new word for debts which one does not want to' pay back because one prefers to spend money on armaments."

Britain Hopes at Least to Avoid Gold Payment

London, Nov. 15—The American reply to the British note asking reconsideration of war debts is anxiously awaited here and today Whitehall was unable to conceal its interest in the American public's reception of the French and British communications.

Although hoping for a reply which will grant the requested consideration and ultimate revision of the debts, Britain's chief worry is whether action will be taken by President Hoover and President-elect Roosevelt on extending the existing moratorium to enable postponement of the payments due December 15.

ROOSEVELT IN SECLUSION AT MANSION

Recovers From Cold; to Phone Hoover Tomorrow About the Debt Conference

Albany, N. Y., Nov. 15—Gov. Roosevelt remained in seclusion at the executive mansion today, receiving only his aides and secretaries.

Although the President-elect was scheduled to go to the Capitol, it was said he would remain at home all day. One of his secretaries said he had entirely recovered from the cold that sent him to bed last Friday.

It was said Mr. Roosevelt would not attempt to reach President Hoover by telephone until the chief executive returns to Washington tomorrow.

The Governor, in accepting the President's invitation to a conference at the White House, suggested that the time be fixed through a telephone conversation between the President and President-elect.

ALL UP TO HOOVER

Gov. Roosevelt has no intention of shouldering responsibility for any decisions with respect to war debt revision or moratorium extension prior to his inauguration March 4.

"The Governor has received stacks of telegrams praising him for his reply to President Hoover's invitation," said M. H. McIntyre, Roosevelt's press representative.

Reports that Mr. Roosevelt had suffered a relapse were denied at the executive mansion.

"The Governor is still suffering from his cold but he is not sick," McIntyre declared. "He decided to remain in bed today to guard against taking any more cold."

That responsibility, Mr. Roosevelt declared in his telegram accepting the President's invitation, rests squarely on the shoulders of Mr. Hoover and the present Congress.

After expressing the hope that President Hoover would confer with the Democratic leaders of Congress on the debt question, Mr. Roosevelt said:

"In the last analysis the immediate question raised by the British, French and other notes creates a responsibility which rests upon those now vested with executive and legislative authority."

Announcement of the White House conference should be "wholly informal," adding:

"Your and I can go over the entire situation."

WIRE TO PRESIDENT

In his telegram to President Hoover accepting the invitation to confer at the White House on the way to Warm Springs, Va., Governor Roosevelt wrote:

"I shall be delighted to confer with you in Washington, but I have been confined to the house with a slight cold and I am, therefore, not able to suggest a definite date.

"I have already arranged to meet a number of the Democratic leaders of the present Congress late this month at Warm Springs. It will be helpful to me to have your views and all pertinent information when I meet them. I hope that you also can see them at the earliest opportunity because, in the last analysis, the immediate question raised by the British, French and other notes creates a responsibility which rests upon those now vested with executive and legislative authority."

WILL START TUESDAY

Originally the governor had planned to leave for Warm Springs next Monday, but he is expected to attend a party Monday night in New York for the workers at Democratic national headquarters.

The governor is expected to go to his Hyde Park home Friday night for the week-end. He will be at Warm Springs at the very latest on Thanksgiving Day because he has a long standing engagement to have dinner with the trustees of the Foundation, which he established there for the treatment of infantile paralysis. It is expected therefore he will leave New York next Tuesday morning and confer with President Hoover at the White House that afternoon.

He will remain at Warm Springs for at least two weeks.

Belgian Debt Note Given to Stimson

Washington, Nov. 15 (AP)—The Belgian government today presented a note to the American government on the debt situation. The communication was reported to be similar in tenor to the statement last week by Great Britain and France.

Roosevelt Six Million Votes in Front

Washington, Nov. 15 (AP)—With 5518 voting units still missing, Associated Press compilations today showed that Franklin D. Roosevelt's plurality was 6,154,809, with 36,700,600 votes recorded.

The Democratic nominee's total vote was 21,115,522. President Hoover's 14,960,713.

The returns for minor parties were fragmentary in many states, but the totals compiled were: Norman Thomas, Socialist candidate, 557,316 votes; Upshaw, Prohibitionist candidate, 26,839; Harvey, Liberal party candidate, 21,220; Foster, Communist party candidate, 15,410, and Reynolds, Socialist-Labor party candidate, 2580.

EARLY VOTE AT QUINCY POLLS

Quincy mayoralty candidates, five in number, had large fleets of autos scurrying about today as the city's primaries opened. The hopefuls predicted that 20,000 of the 33,000 registered voters would turn out.

Mayor Thomas J. McGrath seeks a third term, and his opponents are Charles A. Ross, Carl H. Leander, William Edmonton and Wendell P. Thore. The primaries are nonpartisan and the polls close at 8 p. m.

There are 20 candidates in the field for nomination for three posts as councillor-at-large. Nine are contesting for nomination in Ward 2, where there is a council vacancy, due to the resignation of Representative-elect John T. Flavin.

Voters in Haverhill and Fall River flocked to the polls in large numbers today to nominate candidates for mayor and other municipal offices. The elections will be held in December.

In Haverhill there are 36 candidates for 10 places on the ballot. Forrest V. Smith, present mayor, who is seeking renomination, is opposed by seven candidates, one of whom, Francis Scales, is serving a term in Lawrence jail for larceny.

Mayor Daniel F. Sullivan of Fall River also has seven rivals for his job.

France Is Facing 300 Million Deficit

Paris, Nov. 15 (AP)—In the 1933 budget introduced today in the Chamber of Deputies receipts are estimated at $1,812,080,000 and expenditures at $1,911,200,000. The present deficit is estimated at $320,000,000.

Two Bay State Towns Lead in Low Infant Mortality

Washington, Nov. 15 (AP)—A remarkable decrease in infant mortality during the first 15 years that statistics have been kept was commented on today by Willard C. Smith of the Census Bureau.

A new low of less than 62 deaths per 1000 births occurred in 1521, as compared with 100 per 1000 in 1915.

The year 1932 also, Smith said, is setting some excellent individual low records in infant death rates.

Two Massachusetts cities of more than 100,000 population, he reported, could boast five successive weeks without a single infant death.

"From the week ending Oct. 8, during which New Bedford reported but one infant death, for five consecutive weeks until Nov. 5, 1932, New Bedford reported no infant deaths," said Smith.

"Lynn, Mass., also this year experienced five successive weeks, July 16 to Aug. 13, 1932, without a single infant death."

ELY FACES FIGHT WITH G. O. P. ON JOBS

Clash Expected Over 10 Major State Officers Whose Terms Expire on December 1

Governor Ely and the outgoing Republican executive council are due to cross swords a week from tomorrow when the Governor begins taking action on 10 major state officers whose commissions expire December 1.

The policy of the council has been to oppose every attempt made by the Governor to replace Republican office holders with Democrats where the Republicans are seeking office again. For many months now, they have succeeded in holding over Superintendent of Buildings Fred H. Kimball and Frank A. Brooks, chairman of the parole board, against the Governor's wishes.

Of the 10 whose commissions expire Dec. 1, Paul E. Tierney, commissioner of civil service, is the only Democrat of record, and Tierney is reported as not being particularly anxious of taking the assignment again. This job pays $5000 a year.

3 REPUBLICANS IN JOBS

Then there is the director of the division of fisheries and game, which pays $4500, occupied by Raymond J. Kenney. Kenney was appointed to this position by the Governor to fill a vacancy. It is expected that he will be renamed.

For the other eight jobs, all held down by Republicans, there are many candidates and strong pressure will be brought to bear to have Democrats recognized for these key positions.

A description of these eight positions follows:

Commissioner of agriculture, salary $6000, held by Dr. Arthur W. Gilbert of Belmont; member of state tax appeal board, salary $7000, occupied by Alexander Lincoln of Boston; commissioner of conservation, salary $6000, held by William A. L. Bazeley of Uxbridge; associate commissioner of labor and industries and chairman of the board on conciliation and arbitration, $4000, present encumbent, Edward Fisher of Lowell.

OTHER PLUMS TO PICK

Public utilities commissioner, $7000, held by Leonard Hardy of Huntington; associate commissioner of public works, $6000, held by Terrence MacDonald, former secretary to Governors Cox and Fuller; metropolitan district commissioner, $5000, held by William F. Rogers of Braintree; commissioner of correction, $6000, held by Dr. A. Warren Stearns of Billerica.

Dr. Stearns has repeatedly declared that he will not accept a reappointment and reports have linked Fred Appleton, assistant secretary to Governor Ely, with this job.

In the case of the state tax appeal board, there will be a determined effort to replace Alexander Lincoln with a Democrat. This board was created a few years ago and previous to going out of office Governor Allen named the three original Republican members for various length of terms. Lincoln's is the first to expire. The revaluation downward by this board of many places of Boston real estate has brought repeated blasts from Mayor Curley.

Mother Kills Two, Wounds Third Child

Graham, N. C., Nov. 15 (AP)—Mrs. Riley Dollar, 43, wife of a textile worker, today shot and killed two of her children as they lay asleep, critically wounded another and then walked from her home and surrendered to police.

She said she killed her children because of ill treatment at the hands of her husband covering a period of 21 years.

"I had hather spend the rest of my life in prison than live with my husband," she said. "I will live longer in prison and the children are better off."

Helen Keller Donates $5000 Prize to Blind

New York, Nov. 15—The $5000 Helen Keller received as the Pictorial Revue annual achievement award for 1931 is now the property of the American Foundation for the Blind.

Accepting the $5000 check yesterday, Miss Keller announced:

"I am going to use the $5000 to assist other persons like myself, deaf and blind. You who can see, you who have friends, you who have independence, have no idea how those live in double darkness, the prison of the body which is blindness and the dungeon of the mind which is silence."

Senator Brookhart Reported Improved

Chicago, Nov. 15—Sen. Smith W. Brookhart of Iowa, who was reported seriously ill of pneumonia at the home of C. M. Pope in Hinsdale, a suburb of Chicago, where he took ill, was "slightly improved" today, Dr. Carl M. Schultz, his consulting physician, announced.

Col. Hugh Scott, head of Edward Hines, Jr., Memorial Hospital, was one of the physicians called in the consultation. It had been planned to move Brookhart to the hospital, but Col. Scott feared that to move him at this time might prove fatal.

Heir to $800,000 Offers Self for Sale

Hollywood, Cal., Nov. 15—A potential millionaire announces that he will auction off six and one-half years of his life.

He is Albert J. Baron Guggenheim, 23, member of a wealthy New York family, who recently created a furore by going to work as a bus boy in a Hollywood cafe because no one must eat."

Young Guggenheim will receive a fortune of $800,000 now being held in trust for him when he is 30, provided he can prove to satisfaction of trustees that he is capable of taking care of it, because he was too wasteful, trustees recently cut off interest payments to the heir.

Peggy Lawton May Ask for More Time in Suit

New York, Nov. 15—Peggy Lawton, former Follies girl, was preparing today to defend her character and reputation from the attack of her husband, Freddie Rich, orchestra leader, who is seeking a divorce.

At Miss Lawton's request, the case has been postponed several times already.

Although the case is scheduled to come up in Supreme Court today, James D. C. Murray, Miss Lawton's attorney, intimated that he might request further delay. Atty. Murray worked on a murder case all last week.

built 120 years ago, once visited the Belgian, English and other European courts, when her father represented this country in Belgium.

"Belle of the old South," she lived a recluse, receiving only occasional and rare visits from an elderly gentleman whose name had been romantically associated with hers long ago.

Nearby, in a dilapidated old castle, called by neighbors "Goat Castle," there lived amid the ruin and wreckage an old couple now accused of the strange crime. The man, once a well known concert player, had his hand mutilated and retired to "Goat Castle." A lady went with him as housekeeper. For a long time a feud had existed between this elderly couple and the old lady found dead alone in her old house. A trifling quarrel about trespass started the feud.

A number of Negroes are accused of helping in the murder and the rifling of Miss Merrill's ancient house. The prosecutor says, "I have plenty of evidence, plenty of bloody finger prints."

"Goat Castle" has been "tidied up" and thousands of visitors pay admission at the gate. The secluded pianist, in spite of his mutilated hand, has been persuaded to give concerts, which have proved profitable because of public curiosity. All the neighborhood wonders why anybody should have shot "Old Jennie Merrill."

Transcontinental railroads running from the Atlantic to the Pacific will note the announcement in the Miami Herald that the Seaboard Air Line in a few days will run a train from New York to this city with only one night on the way. Trains that make the trip to California take three nights going, four nights coming back. Every Californian will tell you "it is worth it, no matter how long it takes." But the public ignorance must be considered.

Of course the flying machine will soon come, fool proof, accident proof, weather proof. Every trip within the borders of the United States will be made by daylight of the same day, and an hour or two won't make much difference.

ALAS, THE POOR ZOO BUFFALOES, NO ONE WANTS THEM

DOOMED TO END AS FEAST IN POORHOUSE

Many Ask for Franklin Park Extra Deer, but No Requests for Bison Are Made

The deer, ladies and gentlemen, are apparently safe.

But nobody wants the poor buffaloes and unless Frank Buck, who brings 'em back alive, is called to car 'em away, a buffalo stew or ragout of bison, or however you serve a section of the vanishing herd, will probably grace the poorhouse festive board.

That was the status today of the excess Franklin Park zoo animals which Park Commissioner Long proposed to slaughter because of overcrowded conditions and the well known depression.

For the four red deer and the 12 Sika deer there are any number of requests from gentlemen farmers, owners of large estates and small boys. But nobody wants the four buffaloes.

GAME SUPPER

Mayor Curley said he didn't hear any protest about killing the animals, either deer or buffaloes, and that he thought a game supper would be quite a treat for the Long Island inmates.

He recalled that a few years ago he offered to provide the inmates any kind of a dinner they desired and they voted unanimously for corned beef and cabbage.

Corned buffalo meat and cabbage might be provided but the mayor said he thought the poor folks at the farm would enjoy the game supper just as well as they did corned beef and cabbage.

The Park department offices were besieged with telephone requests for all types of zoo animals except the buffalo. High pitched voices inquired the chances of getting an elephant or monkey, but as regards the buffalo, the most romantic animal figures in the nation's history, there were no takers.

HUNDREDS PHONE IN

Miss Nellie Corcoran, the park department phone operator, had hundreds of inquiries about the deer and finally was instructed by Commissioner Long to inform all applicants to put their requests in writing and state their facilities for caring for the animals. Then he will confer with the mayor.

Arch E. Clair, manager of Nottumbega Park, asked what he would do with a deer, having sold two and an elk to Franklin Park within the last three years.

As regards the buffaloes, he said he would confer with Harry H. Hannon, president of the Middlesex & Boston Railway, which owns the park, and possibly a trolley would be sent for the bison. But he wasn't hopeful.

IT'S GOODBYE TO AN OLD PAL, UNLESS--

Perhaps little 4-year-old Eleanor O'Brien, of 141 Dorchester st., South Boston, is not aware of it—but she may be saying a last goodbye to an old friend. For today the decision reached the zoo. The order has gone out to slaughter 16 deer and four buffaloes on the Franklin Park range for economy's sake.

But there is one ray of hope, especially for the children's favorites—the deer. They will gladly be given to any other zoo or private individual prepared to care for them. So they may live to nibble more food out of little hands, or—there'll be venison on Long Island. (Staff photo.)

12,000 GUARD WALES' LIFE IN BELFAST

Prince to Pay Three-Day Visit and Dedicate North Ireland Parliament Buildings

Belfast, Northern Ireland, Nov. 15 (AP)—More than 12,000 men will guard the Prince of Wales when he arrives here tomorrow to dedicate the new Parliament buildings at Stormont.

Four thousand of them will be armed. Elaborate precautions are being taken for his safety during his three-day stay.

Only a few weeks ago Belfast was the scene of violent street fighting, and some groups have announced their hostility to the presence of the prince.

His guard will include 2000 troops, 2000 Ulster policemen and 8000 Orangemen who have volunteered to assist along the prince's route during public appearances. One hundred officers and men of the Royal Iniskilling Fusileers will form the guard of honor.

LEAVES LONDON TONIGHT

The whereabouts of the heir to the throne at any given moment while in Belfast will be an official secret. The time of his arrival may not be announced more than a few hours in advance.

The prince is expected to leave London about 11:15 p. m. tonight aboard a regular train, transferring to a special train somewhere en route to Liverpool. There he will board a ship reserved for his use.

The troops and Ulster police have trained for weeks for the royal visit. They will provide a shoulder-to-shoulder guard along the five-mile route to the Parliament building. Plainclothes detectives will mingle with the crowd.

TANKS GUARD PARADE

Whippet tanks will bring up in the rear of each procession in the parade. A police car filled with armed detectives will lead.

Extra police will be held in reserve in various barracks to handle any major disturbance, although authorities have announced formally they expect no trouble.

Economy is to be the keynote of the ceremonies, and the prince's advice to those in charge to spend "not a penny more than necessary" has been faithfully followed.

WANTS $25,000 FOR RIDE WITH RUNAWAY

Owner of Hired Horse is Sued After Unrestrained Gallop in Blue Hill Ave.

If you ask Benjamin Klayman, it was a horse of another color and Klayman wants $25,000 for a very fast ride which was not ordered by him and which—if you ask him again—was very unwelcome.

Klayman, because of the incident of last Sept. 22 when he alleges a horse ran away with him and injured him, filed suit for that amount today in superior court against Bessie Kaplan of Wellington st., Mattapan, proprietor of the Shawmut ave. stables in Shawmut ave.

It was a nice day when Klayman hired the horse and wagon at the stables, a nice Indian summer day, with birds singing, blue sky above, warmth in the air and no signs of anything due to go wrong.

The horse was held up to him, he claims as a fine, gentle beast, safe and sound, whereas Klayman charges that while sound enough, the animal was anything but gentle and safe—and proved it to him by smashing an unscheduled run along Blue Hill ave. in Roxbury.

Klayman suffered injuries through the runaway because of misrepresentation of the horse, he avers.

FRANK L. WRIGHT KIDNAP TARGET

Madison, Wis., Nov. 15 (AP)—A plot to kidnap Frank Lloyd Wright, internationally famous architect, was disclosed today with the infomation that Madison police were seeking the author of a threatening letter delivered to Wright at his home near Spring Green Nov. 5.

Several students at the new school which Wright established at his home, Taliesin, were said to have been maintaining an armed guard.

Wright was in New York. He will return this week-end. A friend said Wright would be accompanied by a personal bodyguard.

The kidnap note was postmarked Madison, Nov. 4. It demanded that a sum of money be deposited at an appointed place and declared that the architect would be abducted and held for ransom if he failed to comply.

Let's All be Friends

—By ARTHUR "BUGS" BAER—

Now that Hoover and Roosevelt are scratching each other's backs we also want to clip out a row of paper dolls.

If two Presidents can do some political necking us little turnips can also apologize.

Therefore, and notwithstanding, we apologize for saying that Ben Turpin got that way from looking for prosperity around the corner.

Ben was that way before the campaign. The only reservation we make in this apology is that the campaign didn't do Ben any good.

We are sorry that we called the Republican orators a mob of hogcallers. Our better judgment tells us they were an octave too low.

If it's not too late we also want to doff the contrite hat to Dolly and Alice. If we can't be the same old sweethearts, let's be the same old friends.

We ain't forgetting that Alice has a fifth cousin in the White House. And while you can forget a fifth cousin on Dec. 25 you can't on March 4.

U.S. BARS COUNT WITHOUT CASH

New York, Nov. 15 (INS)—Count Hughes De Borchgrave D'Altena, of Ghent, Belgium, a tall blonde youth whose mother was an American, went to Ellis Island today instead of visiting his great uncle in Philadelphia.

The count, whose passport was in order, was barred from landing because the pockets of his well-tailored trousers were not lined with cash.

With him went Samuel Schwimmer, 25-year-old Czecho-Slovakian who had stowed away in the Westerland, the ship on which Count D'Altena also came. Schwimmer eluded detection all the way across, only to be discovered a few hours before the vessel docked.

GASOLINE PRICE UP HALF A CENT

An increase of one-half cent per gallon of gasoline will be effective tomorrow morning throughout New England and New York, according to an announcement made today by the Standard Oil Co. of New York and other local dealers.

There will be certain minor exceptions to this price, especially in upper New York state, where the increase will be from one-half to a cent.

Two other companies as yet have made no decision as to an increase in their prices. They are the Atlantic Refining and Gulf Refining Companies.

Cities-Service Refining Co., Colonial-Beacon Oil Co. and Shell Co. also announce the same increase.

RUTH SOBS AND GETS DIVORCE

Reno, Nev., Nov. 15 (AP)—Ruth Elder Camp, aviatrix, obtained dissolution of her third marriage, that to Walter Camp, motion picture producer, here today. She testified she and Camp had been unable to live happily together. The hearing was secret.

Tears were running down her cheeks as Miss Elder, who was given the right to resume her maiden name, came from the courtroom.

"A great big lump, this big," she said, holding up her two fists, "came up in my throat and I just had to cry. Yesterday a letter came from Walter in which he asked me to come home for Thanksgiving dinner, and I hardly knew what to do."

R. R. SUBSIDIES DRAW FIRE

Cincinnatti, Nov. 15 (AP)—A United States Chamber of Commerce committee studying competition among the country's transportation systems today opposed any form of government subsidy to a common carrier.

David F. Edward of Boston, chairman of the committee, said the members agreed that a number of present difficulties would be overcome, and a fair basis of competition assured, if subsidies were eliminated.

Canada Cuts Prices of All Whiskies

Toronto, Nov. 15 (AP)—Reduction of 33 cents a bottle on most Canadian liquor and 40 cents a bottle on Scotch whiskies, effective tomorrow, was announced by Stewart McClenaghan, chairman of the Ontario Liquor Control Board, today.

"We are passing on to the public the full benefit of the reductions in tariff on the imported brands and in excise on the Canadian," he said.

There will be no change in the price of beer or imported wines.

Guns, Wire Guard Voodoo From Raiders at Tech

The walls of Building No. 10 at Technology looked down on a strange sight today—a breastworks of sandbags and barbed wire, bristling with a machine gun and three rifles in the old overseas manner.

Thus did the editors and staff of Voodoo, the Technology comic magazine, safeguard the good old publication against repetition of a raid of yesterday when miscreants seized and mutilated 700 copies.

The breastworks, with the empty machine gun and rifles manned by uniformed Voodooers, are thrown across the main lobby of the building to give warning of all attempted invaders—but the only casualty today was when a dignified member of the staff whisked too close to the wire and tore out a generous section of his pants.

War is on between the staffs of Voodoo and of the Tech News, with man of the Pi Delta Epsilon group, the journalistic fraternity conducting a private war against the Voodooers for alleged ribaldry in pictures and reading matter carried in the comic.

On Sunday night, according to Tech News men's charges, some of the Voodoo staff, headed by Pierre S. du Pont, 3d, business manager; Duke Selig, Jr., general manager, an, William H. Mills, advertising manager, went to the printer and by a ruse obtained 700 copies of the News, which they covered with rubber-stamp imprints of a cat's paw.

Yesterday, according to the cross charges, members of the News staff pulled the same trick on the Voodo print shop and stamped up 700 copies of Voodoo with a similar catspaw symbol.

Communiques from the front in Building No. 10 are being awaited by all Tech.

SWIFT GAINS 89 IN RECOUNT

With an average gain of but four votes a precinct needed to win, John E. Swift, Democratic candidate for Lieutenant-Governor, has picked up an average of 11 votes a precinct in the first recounts, former Chairman Charles H. McGlue of the Democratic State committee, revealed today.

The first recounts were started yesterday in Fall River, McGlue, in charge for Swift and the committee. There are nine wards in the city.

In Ward 3, Gaspar G. Bacon lost 17 votes and Swift gained 30, for a net gain of 107. In Ward 7 Bacon gained 3 and Swift lost 3 for a net loss of 6 in the ward. In Ward 8, with only two precincts counted, Bacon gained 13 andw Swift lost one, for a net loss of 12—making Swift's net gain in the entire recount to date 89.

There are 1707 precincts in the state and Swift must pick up more than 6800 votes to win.

FRENCH PLAN VIEWED WITH SUSPICION

By KARL H. VON WIEGAND
Universal Service Special Cable

Geneva, Nov. 15—The new French disarmament plan, announced at League of Nations headquarters, dashed cold water on the optimism professed yesterday that the formula would result in regalvanizing the disarmament conference.

The French scheme is viewed here as a medley of the Hoover, Herriot and Paul-Boncour plans, full of catches, complicated, and designed to make the league a real "super-government" with its own military and air force.

Geneva is frankly skeptical of the chances of the French plan's being accepted in any practical and effective form, and prospects of bringing Germany back with the French plan are none too good.

To this hash of plans, Foreign Secretary Sir John Simon will add the British ingredient tomorrow.

It is admitted there is little hope of the United States, Russia, Japan and Germany accepting any kind of international control of aviation as suggested by Paris, and it is doubtful if Simon can mobilize even British support for such a scheme.

British interest here apparently centers around abolishing aerial bombing. The British suddenly have got the wind up over the appalling possibilities in the event London should be bombarded at the outbreak of war, and are willing to go to any lengths to avert such a calamity.

Norman H. Davis, President Hoover's agent, is understood to have related to Sir John Simon, the British foreign secretary, his talks with Premier Mussolini on the possibilities of a Franco-Italian naval question.

NEW DRIVE ON REBEL GANGS

Moscow, Nov. 15—A new "big push" by Japanese armies to drive Chinese rebels out of Manchukuo was forecast today when Moscow was advised that peace negotiations between Japanese and Gen. Su Pingwen, Chinese rebel leader west of Taitsihar, had broken down.

Vice Commissar of War Karakhan, in an official statement, declared that the Soviet consul at Manchuli, important terminus of the Chinese Eastern Railway, who advised him that Gen. Su Ping-Wen refuses to negotiate further with the Japanese commissioner now at Matsievsky.

The breakdown, according to Vice-Commissar Karakhan, blasts hopes of the reopening of the Chinese Eastern Railway from Manchuli to Vladivostok and means that Gen. Su will not release Japanese captives. This was said to presage a new drive by the Japanese.

FRIENDLY RIVALS—CHAT

NORMA SHEARER JOAN CRAWFORD

Above is one of those very, very few pictures ever made of those two friendly professional rivals together, Norma Shearer and Joan Crawford. They were photographed at the first seasonal dance of the exclusive Mayfair Club in Los Angeles. They are the two ace stars of the M-G-M studios (excluding Garbo), and are continually fighting for the good roles in the stories the company purchases. However, Norma is married to Irving Thalberg, and that gives her an edge on Joan, because Thalberg is an M-G-M executive. For instance, there was bitter warfare over the lead with Clark Gable in "Strange Interlude," and you know that Norma won out. (Wide World Photo.)

CLERIC UPHOLDS WENDEL HEIR

New York, Nov. 15 (AP)—Testimony taken in Scotland concerning the parentage of Thomas Patrick Morris, who claims to be a nephew of the late Ella V. Von E. Wendel and therefore entitled to her $35,000,000 estate, was read in surrogate's court yesterday.

Counsel for the estate read a deposition in which Mgr. John Turner, head of the Dundee diocese in which the Morris family lived, identified a baptismal certificate describing Morris as "the lawful son of Margaret and Peter Morris."

Morris contends his parents really were Mary Ellen Devine and John G. Wendel, the latter a brother of Miss Wendel, and that he was placed with the Morris family for upbringing.

On the other hand, counsel for Morris read a statement, also taken in Dundee, quoting James McAvan, son-in-law of Mrs. Morris, as saying just before she died:

"Jimmy, I am going to tell you something I have never told you before. Rose Ann (McAvan's wife) has always thought that Thomas Patrick was her brother. Really he is a son of Mary Ellen Devine and John G. Wendel."

Surrogate James A. Foley ruled this statement could not be taken as proof that Wendel actually was Morris's father.

Lawrence Man Found Dead in Garage

Lawrence, Nov. 15—Walter J. Burke, 49, of Jackson st., until recently employed for more than 20 years as a moulder at Fallon's brass foundry here, was found dead on the rear seat of his sedan in its garage in Conduit st., yesterday afternoon. Medical Examiner Victor A. Reed pronounced death due to monoxide gas poisoning.

Child Prodigy Plays Her Way Into U. S.

New York, Nov. 15 (AP)—Polish Milliner, prodigy pianist from Vienna, won swift entry into the United States by tickling the ivories in such masterful fashion that she charmed customs men.

The 17-year-old girl, arriving yesterday to fill engagements from coast to coast, was sent to Ellis Island on a technicality. Customs men said she must be properly identified.

After she played several Chopin themes she was admitted.

Bolivians Hold Forts on Frontier

Asuncion, Paraguay, Nov. 15 (AP)—Five thousand Bolivan soldiers clung stubbornly today to Forts Murguia, Samaklay and Saavedra after heavy fighting over the week-end in which the Paraguayan forces contended they killed 500 of the enemy.

The artillery was credited with preventing the capture by the Paraguayan attackers of the thrice-guarded doorway to Fort Munoz, Bolivia's principal stronghold in the Chaco.

Acid, Mistaken for Liquor, Kills Two

Manchester, Conn., Nov. 15—Acid which police said had been mistaken for liquor caused the death of two men and made two others ill, one critically, during a card party last night.

Theodore Aliczi, 41, and George Straff, 61, died in a hospital, where Ignatz Serro was reported in a critical condition, and Peter Ambrose was described as seriously ill.

NEW AIR LANE FOR VATICAN

Rome, Nov. 15 (US)—Work was begun today on a new short wave radio station at the historic Papal villa at Castelgandolfo, 20 miles from the Vatican. It will be a twin of the famous Papal radio station already completed in Vatican City.

Construction will be under the personal direction of Senator Guglielo Marconi, who also directed the construction of the Vatican radio plant.

Simultaneously with the announcement of plans for the new short wave set, great activity was noticed at Villa Castelgandolfo. There it was predicted that Pope Pius himself would soon make one of his rare exits from the Vatican to visit the villa, where no Pope has set foot since 1870.

Engineers said that radio service between the villa and the Vatican would be established by December 1.

'Dark Hours' Just That for Don Marquis as Play Is Hit

By DAVID P. ENTNER

New York, Nov. 15 (INS)—They shouted for teh author at the gala opening of the modern Biblical play, "The Dark Hours."

But the author wasn't there.

"The Dark Hours." A grim coincidence.

Don Marquis, America's famous humorist, who had written a serious play over which he had dreamed and worked most of his career, was at home—blind.

His physician said he must not go to the opening. The excitement would not be good for him.

So Don Marquis tossed on his bed and peered into the unknown until the newspapers came today and they read him the notices of the dramatic critics. They were good notices.

He was very tired but he could not sleep until they came. What did he think about?

"Sometimes I saw lights before my eyes, cubistic shapes, sparkling like the sparkler I like use on the Fourth of July," said Marquis. "There was a policeman with a club in the room all night. I guess I must have been awfully excited."

Marquis' eyes went back on him because of overwork in connection with the casting and directing of his play. His actress-wife, Marjorie Marquis, is handling it now.

It has been two weeks since the light went out for him. However, there has been some improvement and the doctors say he will eventually regain his sight.

Two Injured at $200,000 Plant Fire

Danbury, Conn., Nov. 15 (AP)—Five buildings were destroyed or badly damaged and several others threatened yesterday by a fire in the factory of the Eastern Fur Products Co., manufacturers of hatters' fur. Two men were injured, one seriously. Fire officials said the damage would exceed $200,000.

HOOVER IN RED CROSS PLEA

Washington, Nov. 15 (AP)—An appeal from President Hoover for all Americans to "respond in generous measure" to the Red Cross roll call was made public by officials of the relief organization, along with their own plea last night.

Chairman John Barton Payne of the Red Cross and Chief Justice Hughes of the United States joined in a program sounding the appeal for funds, citing emergency needs and accomplishments of the organization. Gov. Roosevelt will speak tonight.

Payne read in the course of an address a message from President Hoover which said in part:

"By every means that is available as Chief Executive I have for the past three years summoned every private and public agency to co-operate in making certain that no man, woman or child of all our people should go hungry or cold through any lack of fore-handed provision. The response of these agencies has been whole hearted and unanimous.

"Their support has come directly from the people and in this the people have given a magnificent evidence of their warmth of human sympathy and their generosity toward their neighbors in distress. That has been one of the most heartening evidences of the soundness of our democracy.

"Speaking as President of the United States, I appeal once more to the American people for unanimous and generous support of the American Red Cross enrollment campaign."

YULE CLUBS TO PASS OUT 441 MILLIONS

New York, Nov. 15 (AP)—A total of $441,000,000 will be distributed within the next two weeks to 10,500,000 members of Christmas Clubs by 7000 banking and other organizations, it was announced today.

Herbert F. Rawll, president of the Christmas Club, Inc., said that the average distribution would be $42 per person against $47 per depositor last year. But this year's $42, he pointed out, will purchase more goods than last year's larger average.

Due to the improvement in the last half-year of the nation's banking situation, he predicted that greater impetus would be given to the Christmas Club movement in 1933.

Of the total distribution, it was estimated that $167,500,000 would be used to purchase Christmas present; $133,500,000 for permanent investment or saving; $48,500,000 to take care of year-end bills and other commitments; $44,000,000 for taxes; $26,500,000 for mortgage interest, and similar charges; $22,000,000 for insurance premiums and the balance of $9,000,000 for education, charity, travel and similar purposes.

Last Ringling Makes Old Pal Partner in Big Circus

New York, Nov. 15 (AP)—John Ringling, last of the five showmen brothers, has taken his old friend, Sam Gumpertz into business with him, and for the first time the Ringling circus interests are going to have a boss who isn't a member of the family.

Gumpertz today confirmed reports he had been named vice-president and general manager of the circus at a meeting of the board of directors last Friday.

John Ringling, who always traveled with the show until last summer when he was laid up with an infected foot, remains president.

FRIENDS FOR YEARS

He and Gumpertz have been friends for 11 years, and he was visiting Gumpertz at Coney Island when his foot became infected last summer, starting a rumor that it had been amputated.

Gumpertz owns ten per cent of the stock of the Ringling Bros. Barnum & Bailey Combined Shows, an organization which also controls the Sells-Floto, Hagenbeck Wallace, Sparks, John Robinson and A. G. Barnes circuses. John Ringling owns 30 per cent, and the rest is divided among the heirs of his brothers. Widows of two of his brothers and his nephew, Robert, travelled with the Ringling circus after his foot became infected last summer and remained with it until it went into winter quarters at Sarasota, Fla.

The Ringling show is said to have had customary annual earning power of $2,000,000 cut about in half last summer, while the subsidiary circuses were losing money.

LONG EXPERIENCE

Gumpertz has had long experience as an outdoor showman. Among his properties around New York are the Parkway Baths at Brighton Beach, Dreamland Park, Coney Island, and the Coney Island boardwalk. Eden Musee, where are shown wax figures of prominent persons.

Plans have been made, Gumpertz said, to call the coming season the Ringling golden jubilee year, celebrating the 50th year of the Ringlings under "the big top."

100 STARS FALL IN FIRST SHOW

Harvard, Nov. 15 (AP)—Approximately 100 meteors (the vanguard of the leonid showers expected tomorrow and Thursday mornings) were observed between midnight and dawn at the Harvard College observatory field station here today.

Dr. Peter McKay Millman, who had charge of a group of students which operated a dozen cameras, said the nearness of the moon to the meteoric field obscured many fainter leonids. There were, however, several brilliant meteors among those observed.

"So that's the name that made such a difference!

"I never used to take much notice of the kind of macaroni and spaghetti you served—guess I just ate without thinking much about it. But that dish of macaroni you put on the table tonight sure caught my eye right off the mark; made me feel like eating it as soon as I saw it.

"And when I tried it, I knew I was in for a treat. I didn't know macaroni could taste quite as good as all that. It sure is a delicious flavor; and it's so tender and light too! That's why I asked you the name of the brand, and I hope you insist on it always and serve it often from now on."

WHY MUELLER'S NEEDS ONLY 9 MINUTES' BOILING

The Mueller method enables the walls of Mueller's Macaroni and Spaghetti to be made as thin as it is possible for them to be, without collapsing in the cooking. Mueller's never varies, and consequently always requires the same time for boiling—9 minutes. Mueller's invariably cooks up light, fluffy and tender. It is richest in nourishment and is more easily digested.

It's "quik-dried"

This exclusive Mueller process enables all the fine natural flavor to be retained—instead of being partly lost in the drying stage of manufacture!

Mueller quality begins with the ingredients—only the very finest—and continues through every stage of manufacturing and packaging.

PAIR ARRESTED IN COURT FOR KIDNAPING

The crowded corridor of East Boston district court seethed with excitement today as police arrested two more men in connection with the attempted extortion of money from Fred Voight, Quincy pool operator.

They were Guy Lorano, 24, of Crest ave., Beachmont, and Frank Nigro, 26, of Marshall st., Medford.

Lorano was appearing as a defendant in an armed robbery case in which Nigro was a witness, a co-defendant being Salvatore Di Palma of Paris st., East Boston. Di Palma was arrested Saturday with Louis Caggiano, also of East Boston, in connection with the Voight case.

FACES ROBBERY CHARGE

Lorano, charged with attempting to extort money by threats of kidnaping and bodily harm, and Nigro, booked technically as a suspicious person, were taken to Quincy police headquarters.

A habeas corpus writ had brought Di Palma from Dedham jail, where he was held lacking $5000 bail, to East Boston court. With Lorano and Michael Gada of Cross st., East Boston, he appeared charged with armed robbery on William Gambardella of 23 Liverpool st., East Boston.

Police said the three men held up Gambardella four times in one week in October, securing a total of $68 from him. Nigro was in court as a witness. The case was continued to next Wednesday, bail of $10,000 each being imposed.

As Lorano was brought into the corridor he was arrested by Special Officers Philip Whaland, Parker Mulvey and Herbert Patterson with Lieut. George Fallon and Inspector Fred Young of Quincy.

BROTHER FOILS RAIDS

Nigro was taken into custody a short time before the trial began.

The arrest of Di Palma and Caggaino on Saturday followed threats alleged to have been made to kidnap Voight and his six-year-old child. They were arraigned in Quincy court and held in $5000 each for appearance Wednesday.

Voight, who admitted he had been a pool operator, told a story of weeks of harassment at the hands of gangsters who he said, demanded money which he failed to pay.

He said two threats to raid his home had been foiled by his brother, and yesterday Voight was virtually a prisoner in his own house, as a result of happenings the night before. At that time Edward Voight was chased along Wollaston boulevard by an auto carrying six youths.

Edward outdistanced the pursuers, gained the Voight home and then called the police, but the gangsters got away.

ROBINS VICTIM OF KILLER GANG

Joseph Bloom, New York alcohol racketeer.

The latter, according to New York Federal officials, was buried at sea in a barrel of cement by his former associates, who suspected him of squealing.

It was Col. Robins' fate, according to the Boston story, to go the same way as Joe Bloom, but to go alive to the favorite burying ground of this New York gang, while Bloom was killed before his funeral trip down the harbor to Sandy Hook.

But there is more than this superficial similarity in the fate of the two men in the fate of anti-underworld crusader and the notorious racket lieutenant, according to Federal officials.

For the brewery in which Finiello was slain is one of the well protected plants of the Waxey Gordon syndicate, and it was for this syndicate that Joe Bloom worked, Gordon is Public Enemy No. 1 in the New York zone.

CODE DENIES TALE

Code, who is now free on $10,000 bail, denies telling Byrd the story of Col. Robins death, and he also denies enticing his investors with a story of salvaging $7,000,000 in British gold from a sunken rum ship off Nova Scotia. It was a gold mine proposition, according to Code.

Prohibition Agent John V. Finiello led a squad of raiders on the Rising Sun Brewery in Elizabeth, N. J., September 19, 1930. Something had gone wrong for no liquor spot in the country had enjoyed better "protection."

As the raiders entered, two gunmen stepped out from behind a door and shot Finiello dead.

The killers fled but were identified by fingerprints after they had been caught red-handed in a St. Paul hotel, where a runaway New York gangster, Abe Wagner, had been slain. They were identified as Joseph Schaefer and George Young, members of a squadron of killers, led by Meyer Lansky and Benny ("Bugs") Siegel.

$100,000 DEFENSE FUND.

Naturally, being members of such a notorious outfit, they knew too much for the underworld to let them go to the electric chair. They are said to know too much not only about Waxey Gordon's operations, but about such characters as Dutch Schultz, Longey Zwillman, Charles (Lucky) Luciano and Salvatore Spitale, who aided the Lindbergh hunt.

And so the $100,000 defense fund—the bribery and fixing fund—was raised. Col. Robins learned of it, and disappeared. August Goebel, consul engineer of the brewery and witness of the Finiello murder, was slain. And Joe Bloom was slain, perhaps in the same connection as all the authorities know.

Sunny Vermont Sky Ends Romance

Detroit, Nov. 15 (INS)—"Midsummer sunshine in the Vermont mountains" was blamed today for the unhappy marriage of Thomas O. Wolff, of Detroit, and his wife, the former Reiva M. Hatcher of Rochester, N. Y.

The couple was married Aug. 4 at Brattleboro, Vt. A few days later they separated. Today, the bride sued for annulment. The grief filed by her attorney set forth:

"The midsummer sunshine of the Vermont mountains drove from their minds any consideration of the duties and obligations of the marital state, and left them dreaming in a romantic Utopia, from which they suddenly awoke to face stern and unrelenting economic facts."

WIFE STILL ON 8-YEAR VISIT

Mrs. Julius Meyer's visit to Los Angeles started off in 1924 as a two months' stay, but she is still out as a resident of Julius Meyer's household, the husband testified today in probate court in seeking a divorce for desertion.

The husband, former moving picture theater owner, declared he wife, Ida, to come back, but she never did.

Contesting the divorce petition, Mrs. Meyer asserted that Meyer, after she got him a movie job in Los Angeles, refused to go there. Jack, her son by a previous marriage, is a producer of movie shorts, she said; two daughters are scenario writers and the youngest son is in a military school in Los Angeles.

She declared she pays $1750 a year for the young son's training and that in seven years her husband has sent her only $175.

BEER BY MAY--SAWYER

for legal beer to start foaming, declared today:

"I do not agree at all with the Senator. The Democratic party, through platform and candidates, pledged immediate modification of the Volstead Law.

"The party will be in complete control after March 4 and, should the drys kill action in the December short session by filibustering, they will be powerless after March 4.

"We should have beer by May 1 at the latest, and the incoming Massachusetts Legislature should change the state law before that time."

Rep. Sawyer has filed a bill calling for an amendment to the state liquor laws so as to make the sale of alcoholic beverages permissable.

The agitation for prompt action for legalizing of beer and wines and repeal of the prohibition amendment continued in Boston as wets conceded themselves victory and bent their efforts to drawing up measures which would meet with approval of all.

FREED IN COURT

The favoring of two resolutions calling for action by the governor, Legislature and Congress in Boston city council meeting was quickly followed by the filing of Rep. Carroll's bill at the State House.

Reports from Nova Scotia revealed that a conference of 11 New York bootleggers with sea captains of the province has resulted in the sending of 31 ships to St. Pierre for liquor cargoes, destined for landing on N. E. coast.

It was indicated that the liquor barons planned a huge holiday trade in the next two months, due to the slackening of restrictions after the overwhelming popular vote against prohibition as expressed in the Democratic landslide.

Federal Court also presented a scene in sharp contrast to the usual procedure as defendant after defendant drew but slight fines or were placed on probation for liquor offenses. Only two jail sentences were meted out among a total of 97 defendants.

Despite all the agitation however, Boston's licensing board reports there has been no rush of applicants for liquor dispensing licenses and few inquiries about the possibilities. It is evident that a policy of waiting is being followed until it is seen what action is taken by Congress.

In New York, 14 breweries now turning out near beer are only waiting for word of legalization to alter their brewing process and turn out a product of higher alcoholic content. Brewers were also reported to have stated they would change from brewing twice a week to daily.

DRY LAW FUTILE

The Rev. James Gordon Gilkey, of Springfield, in an address before the New York State Federation of Women's Clubs admitted that dryshad erred in expecting prohibition would solve the liquor problem. He urged his audience to lend their support to character building agencies in their attempt to solve the problem of alcohol.

In Washington the outlook for modification in the coming short session grew brighter with the return of senators and congressmen. The aligning of Sen. Ashurst with the wet parade signalized another victory for the wet parade. The senator pointed out that honesty and good faith required him to support the party platform.

One hundred members of the New Haven, Ct., Brewer's Union attended a re-organization meeting and made plans for another session Dec. 18. Brewers were quoted as asserting they could start making beer on two days' notice.

In California the certifying of election results is all that is restraining Gov. Rolph from pardoning about 500 persons imprisoned for violations of the state prohibition law, which according to unofficial returns was repealed by a 10-1 vote at the election. In Oakland repeal of the city ordinance against liquor sales becomes effective in eight days by vote of the city council.

Gloucester Youth's Body Is Recovered

Gloucester, Nov. 15—The body of Robert Wonson, 20, of East Gloucester, drowned last Oct. 19, in Ipswich Bay, has been recovered here. Clyde Robichaw, Gloucester fisherman, Wonson's companion, was also drowned, when the boat the pair were using capsized off Diamond Cove, Annisquam, but his body was recovered shortly after.

Markham Gains 109 Votes in 5 Precincts

Lowell, Nov. 15—With five of 20 precincts counted in a retabulation of ballots, Thomas J. Markham, defeated Democratic candidate for representative in the 14th Middlesex District, had a net gain of 109 votes. Markham was defeated by 193 votes by Rep. Victor F. Jewett, Republican floor leader of the House.

DELAY DECISION IN RUM CASE

New Gedford, Nov. 15—Decision on the attempt to extradite Tommie Kearns of Raynham, alleged rum smuggler, to Portland, Me., today, was reserved until Friday when Kearns was arraigned in Federal court before U. S. Commissioner George E. Lilley.

Kearns is under indictment at Portland as the alleged ring leader of a gang of 20 men in liquor smuggling in that Federal jurisdiction.

The indictment chares that the smuggling took place between April 16 and June 1, of this year, but Kearns, in his own defence, declares he was a daily visitor during those dates at Squantum, supervising repairs to his yacht, Neelia.

NOTED U. S. PROFESSOR IN LOVE TANGLE

MME. IPATIEFF MME. SELDOWITSCH DR. IPATIEFF

World renowned chemist and visiting professor at Northwestern University—Dr. Vladimir N. Ipatieff, in a suit brought in Chicago is accused of having stolen the love of Mme. Seldowitsch, wife of Gregor Seldowitsch, noted chemical engineer of Berlin, Germany. Seldowitsch has instituted the court case by petition for annulment of a divorce decree granted his wife in Chicago, charging it was obtained fraudulently. The petition also alleges that Ipatieff's own wife is "cognizant of the clandestine relationship between the professor and the fraulein from Berlin." (International News Photos.)

PA. G. O. P. VOTE CHALLENGED

Washington, Nov. 15 (INS)—Election of Republican presidential electors in Pennsylvania will be challenged in a suit to be filed in the Dauphin county common pleas court at Harrisburg, S. Davis Wilson, Philadelphia lawyer, said here today.

Wilson came here as counsel for a sub-committee of the House campaign funds committee, which opened a preliminary inquiry into charges of election irregularities in Philadelphia and Delaware.

The suit challenging the victory of President Hoover in Pennsylvania, Wilson said, will be based upon alleged election frauds in Philadelphia principally. He said Lawrence Rupp, defeated by Sen. James J. Davis, will contest Davis' election both before the Senate and in the Pennsylvania courts.

The House committee received complaints of alleged vote-buying in Delaware and reported coercion of voters by lieutenants of the Vare machine in Philadelphia.

WIFE CHARGES 'LATE HOURS'

Salem, Nov. 15—In his language they were lodge meetings, but in hers they were rendezvous with other women, Mrs. Evelyn T. Spittle of Gloucester declared in probate court today in seeking a divorce from Jacob C. Spittle of the same city.

Mrs. Spittle made the reference to other women and her husband's absence from home afts. Judge Alden P. White had asked if there was any particular trouble during their married life. She replied that most of the arguments were over Spittle's staying out nights and that once he threw her downstairs.

"Well," commented Judge White, "married life is usually not free from some disputes and arguments. Do you think he intended to push you downstairs and break your neck, by chance?"

She replied that he very angry, and Judge White took her petition under advisement.

No raw tobaccos in Luckies —that's why they're so mild

WE buy the finest, the very finest tobaccos in all the world—but that does not explain why folks everywhere regard Lucky Strike as the mildest cigarette. The fact is, we never overlook the truth that "Nature in the Raw is Seldom Mild"—so these fine tobaccos, after proper aging and mellowing, are then given the benefit of that Lucky Strike purifying process, described by the words—"It's toasted". That's why folks in every city, town and hamlet say that Luckies are such mild cigarettes.

with two trousers

If there's one thing a Britisher knows how to make, it's a double-breasted jacket. He has a flare for tailoring it with brisk, keen lines that certainly do flatter the figures of us average men.

That's why we went to London for ours —and yours! We wanted vigorous, he-man punch for these smartest of all suits. Broad military shoulders! Tapered waistline! Perfectly spaced buttons (a trick that counts a lot in tracing trim lines). And to carry out just the right effect, we've even used exact reproductions of costly imported worsteds.

If you've ever secretly envied suits with that expensive "made-for-me" look, let these new English double-breasteds—and your mirror—show you how easily (and inexpensively) it can be done.

FANNING

With GEORGE UNDERWOOD

Is Everybody Happy? You tell the World! Lid Lifting Tonight.

Bruins Face Maroons. C'mon You Grizzlies! A Rosy Ross Outlook.

"HAIL! HAIL! THE GANG'S ALL HERE!"

HAIL! HAIL! THE GANG'S all here! Umpty, Dumph, Ti, Dump, Dumph! Umpty, Dumph, Ti, Dump, Dumph! Boy, oh boy, the blowing off of the hockey lid in the Boston Garden tonight has put music in the souls of all the hockey fans. Walking up Washington st. this morning there was a beautific expression on the phiz of everyone and a "come to my arms, you darling" look in their eyes. Maybe Boston fandom isn't glad to see the old hockey gang back! Boston is the greatest hockey town on the map and hockey is the greatest of all sports. It's the champagne on sport's wine list, bubbling, effervescent, brilliant, exhilarating, the sport with the biggest "kick" of all. Once a hockey fan you're always a hockey fan. You become more rabid, fanatical as the years roll along. Just watch some of those ordinarily staid, sedate Boston business men that park themselves in the Garden tonight. Two minutes after the chirp of the opening whistle they're frothing at the mouth and have to be restrained from clambering over the sideboards and attempting to disembowel one referee and wrend the other limb from limb. No, folks, there is no addict like a hockey addict and no game like a hockey game.

AND MAYBE THE Bruins of 1932-33 haven't got a "kick," too. With three such swashbuckling, rough-riding, hard-checking, hefty-smashing fools as Nels Stewart, Eddie Shore and Joe Lamb, all in the same lineup, the Boston Bruin becomes a sure enough Grizzly. Lord help the mugs and the opposing defenses! Whenever we think of Nels Stewart we think of the story they tell of Stewart's mother coming down from Montreal to see her son play in New York. Ma Stewart seated herself decorously, patted out a wrinkle in her dress and, with a worried expression on her face, turned to a friend and exclaimed:

"Oh, Dear, I do hope they don't hurt my little Nelson!"

Whoops! Hurt her little Nelson? "Little Nelson," the huskiest, roughest, toughest player of 'em all! Heigho. They'll always be "babies" to the mothers. Aren't all mothers the dear old things? Isn't mother love the greatest love of all?

THE EXPERTS ALREADY are clamoring about the scoring punch packed by the Bruin's first line of Stewart, Barry and Clapper. On paper that scoring trio is edged out by Toronto's wonderful kid line of Jackson, Primeau and Connacher. But we have a hunch that Boston's scoring ace this season is likely to be your old pal, the busted leg, red-haired Red Beattie. Give Red a couple of the right maties to work with and there is no one on the Braves first line who will show the flame-haired terror anything about scoring. You will note, my dears, that Red already has bagged a brace of goals and that only one of the Swooping Eagles of the first line, Marty Barry, has dented the scoring gong. Billy Burch and Obs Heximer got the other two of the five tallies the Bruins made in the 5-5 red draw with the Leafs and the third farsighting of Les Canadiens. Art Ross has rounded out a pretty menacing front line, not only one. With Joe Lamb back in harness Boston will come close to packing the biggest scoring punch in the league. They'll be the Dempseys of the ice.

TINY THOMPSON IS back with the bells on. Toronto and Montreal papers all handed Tiny orchids for his spectacular goal tending in the games with the Leafs and Maroons. Last year Tiny fell off in form, and the way the local fans rode him didn't help any. Thompson was an Horatius at the Bridge in this season's first two games in the Hinterlands. If he lives up his spectacular play he'll have the fans yelling harder for him this year than they did against him last season. No more rawberries for Tiny! In front of him Tiny has three of the greatest defensive players in the league, Shore, Hitchman and Owen. The first named is be a runaway typhoon on the attack and a Gibraltar on the defense.

NOW WOULDN'T IT be awful, Agnes, if after saying all those nice things about the Bruins those pesky Montreal Maroons should come skating on the ice at the Garden, tonight, and make our Grizzlies look like Teddy Bears? But there doesn't look to be much of a chance of such a thing happening. Only the breaks will win for Montreal. The Maroons have a victory over Ottawa to their credit, but on paper Eddie Gerard's outfit does not loom up strong. The departure of Stewart and Seibert weakened the Maroons. Art Ross says one Montreal player to watch tonight will be Hughie Plaxton, the former amateur. Art tried to lasso Hughie four years ago. But until this year Plaxton refused to desert the simon-pures. Ross says Plaxton looks like one of the best youngsters that has come up in years. We'll all get an eyeful of him tonite. On to the Garden! The gang'll all be there!

IF THAT YALE defense is as strong against the Crimson next Saturday as it was against the charging Princeton Tiger, last week-end, then John Harvard will need something more than his old blunderbuss to blast a hole in the Bulldog front. Fritz Crisler reached in the bag and pulled out a great assortment of tricks, new and old, in an attempt to confound the Bulldog. But the Yale canine refused to be caught napping. It seems mostly likely that the Harvard-Yale duel will be decided in the air. Almost all of this season's important games have been decided in the ether. Straight football has been reserved for inside the 10-yard zone. Even there they've had to go into the ozone.

IT REMAINS TO be seen what Casey and Stevens have up their sleeve in the trick and forward passing line. Harvard certainly has not shown its full hand. Despite the closeness of the score and the importance of the tiff the experts said that Yale was doing plenty covering up in the game with Princeton. Anything apparently can happen when the Crimson and the Blue throw out skirmishing lines next Saturday. As usual, the result is in the lap of the gods. Even money, and take your pick.

WARREN McGUIRK

JACK DONOHUE

The best defense pair in independent football in New England, according to some experts, and the best in the country, according to others. Just a couple of boys who can take it and hand it out. Plus weight and speed, McGuirk is loaded with football savvy, while Big Jack is said to be the toughest guard ever to accidentally butt the breath out of an unwary opponent.

'BEAT B. C.!' CRY B. U. COACHES

Boston University is very apt to profit from Boston College's generosity next Saturday, when it faces the Eagles at Alumni Field.

John Curley, graduate manager of athletics at the Heights, invited the Terriers to the Center, Fordham and Western Maryland games. In these battles, the B. U. players watched the Eagles closely and the McKenney formations will be quite familiar to the intown boys Saturday.

Coach Myles Lane concludes his first year as head coach at B. U. Saturday and, regardless of how he fares, he is not the least bit worried about his job for next year, as he has made as great a hit that he has already been reappointed.

All the same, he would like to give the Eagles the toughest battle they have had in a long time and, if he can do it, he will.

Even more anxious than Lane for the Terriers to make a good showing is John MacMannon, assistant coach. MacMannon coached the Eagles' line for three years and it is a peculiar thing, but a coach gets more satisfaction out of licking a club that he previously coached than any other victory.

Despite the anxiety of the Terriers' coaches to make good Saturday, they are to be complimented on the stand they are taking in regard to Hugo Bertolino and John Paterno.

Bertolino has been out of the lineup for three weeks and Paterno has not been in uniform for a month. Both boys are plenty rugged able to play and will be needed.

AL SIMMONS IN TRAINING CAMP

Hot Spring, Ark., Nov. 15 (AP)—An extra 20 pounds and a burning ambition to regain American League batting honors have caused Al Simmons to start his pre-season training a bit early this year.

Simmons, who will wear a White Sox uniform the coming baseball season, arrived here yesterday with Ralph Shinners, Milwaukee outfielder, for conditioning exercises.

"I am 20 pounds overweight," Simmons said, "but it will be no easy matter to get rid of the excess in the baths, hiking over the mountains and playing golf and tennis.

"That is what I am going to do for the next three weeks. By the time the regular training season begins I'll be in first class condition and my one ambition is to give the White Sox my best efforts and regain batting honors in the American League."

Willard Gave Jack His Toughest Fight

By DAMON RUNYON

New York, Nov. 15—"Who gave you your toughest fight?" I asked Jack Dempsey the other night.

And the Old Manassa Mauler quickly answered a name that will probably surprise the ringworms of the generation that was wrapped up in his fighting career.

"Willard," he said.

"Dempsey, was the heavyweight title from Jess Willard, one of the biggest men ever in the ring, at Toledo, Ohio, July 4, 1919. Willard after being down seven times in the first round and taking a ferocious beating, rallied mightily in the second and third, but wouldn't come out for the fourth, so it stands as a three round knockout for Dempsey. This for the benefit of the newer pugilistic fans to whom 15 years ago is ancient history).

TERRIFIC PUNCHER

"Willard was a great fighter," Dempsey continued. "His fault when he fought me was overconfidence. He thought I was too small and inexperienced for him. He was a terrific puncher, and I was a good fighter myself that day at Toledo. I had to be, especially when Jess hit me a right hand uppercut in the second round, and almost tore my block off. I gave him everything I had in that first round, and if I hadn't practically closed both his eyes, he might have come on and licked me. I didn't have much left when it ended. Yes, Willard was the toughest fellow I ever fought."

"Do you think you could have licked Tunney that day at Toledo?" I asked. "I mean Tunney at his best, and you as you were then."

Dempsey held up his right forefinger. A gesture meaning, as I gathered, that he thought he would have flattened Tunney in a round.

"And I don't mean to be egotistical, either," he said. "Tunney was a great fighter, but he never fought the man I think I was at Toledo."

DEMPSEY RIGHT

Dempsey is right about one thing. He was a good fighter that day at Toledo. Everybody that saw the fight will tell you so. He weighed around 185 pounds, was as tea and fast as a hungry wolf, and in the first round punched with astounding violence.

I remember the right hand uppercut that Willard landed on him in the second. Bleary-eyed, and bleeding, and not knowing whether he was afoot or horseback, the old Pottawatomie Pounder caught Dempsey coming in, and almost lifted him off his feet.

It was his condition, and his ability to live under a punch that saved Dempsey that day. He never afterwards attained the same animal-like condition he had at Toledo, but to his last appearance in the ring he still had the faculty of taking a punch.

Tunney in One? Jack Dempsey says the Panther Dempsey o' Toledo could have done that. What does Tunney say? Turn to the magazine pages for the shocking story, 'A Man Must Fight,' in which Tunney will himself tell you his ideas on that subject, on the long count, on the Harry Wills mixup, on his decision to quit fighting while his brain was still unscramble. It's Tunney's own story, written by himself.

Football Roundup

West Point, Nov. 15—With all due respect to West Virginia Wesleyan's excellent team, it wasn't because of its game this week against Army that made the cadets drill behind curtains yesterday. Army is looking ahead to the Notre Dame and Navy games.

Philadelphia—Talking about hard luck, consider the case of Eddie Massavace. The veteran Penn quarterback had set his heart on winding up his college career in a blaze of glory against Cornell Thanksgiving Day but instead is hobbling around on crutches with only an outside chance of getting into that game.

Providence. — Brown's forthcoming crucial game with Georgetown has forced Tuss McLaughry to do something he hasn't done in years. He's ordered a secret practice for Saturday of this week, the first he's called in many a moon.

Philadelphia—Temple is going to have a lot of vacant spots to fill next year. Thirteen of the Owls' first string squad end football careers against Villanova this week.

Annapolis—Navy may be forced to meet Notre Dame in Cleveland on Saturday with two stars out of shape. Chung-Hoon, flashy halfback, is limping, and fullback Campbell is suffering from a bad toe. However, both will probably be able to start for the Middies.

Syracuse—A pair of twin brothers, Milton and Walter Singer, from Jersey City, N. J., will play on the Syracuse eleven in New York on Saturday against Columbia. Miller will be at center and Walter at end.

Hamilton—Colgate, leading the East in point of scoring, will get only one day's rest, although its next game, against Brown, is not scheduled until Thanksgiving Day. The squad was idle on Monday but will resume drilling this afternoon.

Worcester—There was no let-up for the Holy Cross varsity today, with Coach "Bunny" Corcoran forcing the Purple for Manhattan game on Saturday. Capt. Jim Ryan worked out with the team and may start in the game at tackle. He is certain of starting against Boston College.

Storrs, Ct.—Coach Dole plans only light signal drills and practice this week for his Connecticut Aggies in preparation for the season's final game against New Hampshire at Durham this Saturday.

EAGLE SUBS TO FACE TERRIERS

Indications are that Coach Joe McKenney will depend on his Boston College reserves to hold top form in their tilt with Boston University Saturday. This a decision which McKenney has reached with hesitancy, but all things considered the Eagle coach is virtually forced to start a sub-par team against the Terriers.

McKenney is hoping to hold the Terriers with a second string outfit sees a long shot chance to redeem an otherwise inglorious season by thumping Holy Cross at Worcester. A victory over the Crus diers would do much to offset an admittedly disappointing year.

Yet the situation leaves much to be desired for B. U. has an aggregation which is capable enough to b. S. C.'s best to a close game, and might easily raise havoc with a team which is anything less than first grade.

So, if B. U. is to be turned back, McKenney can't afford to keep his first players far from the sideline. And on the other hand working against this week will lessen B. C. chances against the Crusaders.

B. C. will performe have to get along without Bob Curran, end, Eddie O'Brien, halfbacks, Jerry Slamin and possibly Johnnie Deegan. All these have injuries which are not expected to heal until the Holy Cross tilt rolls around, and even should these players receive a medical O. K. this week, it is not likely that McKenney will risk them against B. U.'s hard hitting club.

In the meantime, there is no let up in the daily skirmish grind men at the Heights. The B. C. varsity, such as it is, are scheduled to go through a long drill wit the freshmen today, and in the next two days as well.

GALLO, SALEM STAR, ELIGIBLE

A dispute which may halt the annual Thanksgiving Day game between Salem and Beverly Higns may follow the action of the Salem school committee in voting Joe Gallo eligible to play for the Witches in the Turkey Day classic.

Gallo, star end of the Salem eleven the past two seasons and counted upon to be a backfield mainstay of the team this fall, was ruled ineligible before the first game by Principal Maurice Smith of Salem High on the grounds that he had played three years of varsity football. His case was later approved by the Mass. Headmasters' Association.

At the Salem school committee, at its session last night, ruled by a vote of 5 to 1, that Gallo didn't spend a term in high school when he attended only four days four years back and that he could play against Beverly. Mayor George Bates of Salem cast one of the votes in Gallo's favor.

Black Hawks Faced With $150,000 Suit

Chicago, Nov. 15 (AP)—The threatened $150,000 breach of contract suit against the Chicago National League Hockey Club a. its President, Maj. Frederic McLaughlin, on behalf of the Chicago Stadium Corporation, will be filed Friday, Sidney N. Strotz, president of the Stadium Corporation, said today.

LAWRENCE HIGH STOCK SOARS

By BILL CONNELL

Down through the Merrimack Valley they're singing the praises of the smooth Lawrence high football team these crisp November days.

For Lawrence, swept out front in the Valley football parade when it smashed Haverhill's unbeaten record on Saturday in decisive fashion. And if it can hurdle the Lowell barrier on Thanksgiving Day it will be Merrimack king for many a day.

Lawrence wasn't noticed much until recently, due to a defeat by Bridge tech in an early scrap. That loss was sustained long before the team hit its stride. Following the setback it kept improving under the guidance of Mack Devlin until today it rates with the best of the school teams.

Joe Savage, quarterback; Joe Gaidis and Charley Masauskas, halfbacks, and Adolph Medelinskas, fullback, Lisauskas and Medelinskas are very fast. Medelinskas ranks as the best all around performer, but the others have enough class in various departments to make up a fast, smooth and powerful backfield unit. All the regular quartet are of Lithuanian extraction. No wonder there is unusual harmony among the four.

Johnny Garrison and George Schmottlack ends; John McKenna, center; Al Powell, George Wade and Robert Robichaud, backs, are excellent reserves.

Lawrence has an effective system in handling football. There are 100 boys on the squad this season. So 25 are left on the varsity and the others go to Team B. Team B plays other second-teams, and the boys get plenty of experience. Which builds up varsity material for the following season.

Ruppert for Beer More Than Babe

French Lick, Ind., Nov. 15 (AP)—Beer, baseball and Babe Ruth were in the mind of Col. Jacob Ruppert of New York today.

Not that the three subjects are related, but it happens the colonel is president of the U. S. Brewers Association, owns the world champion New York Yankee Baseball Club, and has to get the famous slugger's signature on a new contract.

Ruppert is at French Lick for his annual 21-day rest. He thinks the Yankees have a great chance to win the American League pennant in 1933 and does not expect any trouble in signing the highest salaried ball player in history.

"Babe's all right, he will sign up at the right time," Ruppert said.

Return of real beer interests the Colonel more than anything else right now. He believes the Volstead Act will be modified during the short term of Congress, beginning in December, to permit manufacture of the beverage.

FAMED RIVALS MEET AGAIN AT WIGWAM SUNDAY

Pere Marquette K. of C. and Fitton A. C. football teams will meet in a game to decide the independent football championship of New England at Braves Field next Sunday under the auspices of and for the benefit of the Christmas Basket Fund of the Boston Evening American.

The last meeting of these rivals resulted in one of the fiercest battle ever witnessed at the Wigwam. Peres were the victors by a single point when the final whistle blew.

This epic clash-to-be was made possible by the courtesy and helpful consideration of Judge Emil Fuchs, president of the Braves, and of George Marshall, president of the Boston Braves' Professional Football Club. Mr. Marshall surrendered his right to the use of Braves Field and Judge Fuchs turned the entire facilities of the Allston park over to the Boston Evening American for this splendid purpose.

STELLAR ATTRACTION

No finer attraction could be found than this game. Pere Marquette and the Fittons have long been two names to conjure with in football ranks. Ever in the front rank, this year finds them still in the lead.

A tense, hard-fought battle thrilled every fan who attended the first game. After a tremendous struggle, Peres won, 7-6, but many of the congregation felt that the score was unjust. That Fittons had a most decided edge in the actual play and were outlucked, in the opinion of thousands.

So next Sunday will see these teams again battling. Can the Fittons to reverse that score. The Peres to keep their slate clean, with the New England title in sight.

What an aggregation of all-star names.

Big Jack Donahue, Warren McGuirk, Al Weston, Tony Plansky, Charlie Peck, Henry Buckley, Chang Artman, Henry Gildea, Bald Eagle O'Leary, Harry Connors, and Ed Clarke are all on the Peres side.

Jim Cavalieri, Tony Colucci, Phil O'Connell, Ernie Concannon, Anders Anderson, Jackie Fisher, Jack Schmidt-Sewsky, Phil Hoststein, Johnnie Marr play for the Fittons.

There is a decided Boston College-Holy Cross flavor to this struggle. And with the B. C.-H. C. epic following a week later, it is singularly appropriate. Fans Marquette, Donahue, McGuirk, Kilroy, Buckley, Downes and DeVenuti is sufficiently Maroon. And Fans of Holy Cross was flaunted by O'Connell, Colucci, Cavalieri, Bergin, and Concannon of the Fittons.

HOME-BRED STARS

The boys on the two teams are home-bred stars from almost every college in the city of Boston College, H. C., Harvard, Tufts, N. Y. U., B. U., Syracuse, Brown, Fordham, Georgetown, Worcester, Illinois, Montana, and other colleges are represented.

There has long been an argument as to the relative merits of Phil O'Connell and Al Weston, O'Connell, great all around quarterback, at Holy Cross has thrilled thousands in the Stadium and at Braves Field.

Kicking, running, and passing as well as directing, the team, Phil always puts on a marvelous exhibition.

Many remember that last undefeated B. C. team so ably captained by Weston, one of the Newton institution's all-time greats. Al's magnificent running and passing combination was the key to its conspicuous success. Next Sunday will give the fans an opportunity to compare these two stars on the field at the same time.

Kicking and passing exhibitions for distance and accuracy are planned for before the game and between the halves. There won't be a dull moment.

A band and a group of entertainers will also be there to keep things moving.

MANY FEATURES

Joe McKenney, head coach at Boston College, and Myles Lane, head coach at B U., have been asked to hold the stakes next Sunday. And many features are planned and will be announced later this week.

Let's pack Braves Field next Sunday boys and girls, until its bulging sides groan for mercy. Rest assured that there will be a thrill every minute. And your pleasure will give joy to the kids five weeks from now.

Help this Boston American's Christmas Basket Fund show go over big.

Malden to Open With Wakefield

Following its season of victories, Wakefield high has arranged a game with Malden for the opening game of next season for both teams. Practically all of Wakefield's players will return to school next year. This is the first game between Malden and Wakefield high for more than 20 years. Wakefield takes the place of General Electric Apprentices of Lynn, which has occupied the opening position with Malden for the past half dozen years.

BRUINS-MAROONS USHER IN LOCAL ICE SEASON

4 NEW FACES IN BOSTON LINEUP

Garden Lineup

BRUINS		MAROONS
Barry, lw	rw,	Northcott
Stewart, c	c,	Smith
Clapper, rw	lw,	Ward
Hitchman, ld	rd,	Wentworth
Shore, rd	ld,	Conacher
Thompson, g	g,	Walsh

Bruins Spares—Beattie, Burch, F. Jerwa, Chapman, Heximer, Oliver, Galbraith, Owen.

Montreal Spares—Plaxton, Trottier, Brydson, Haynes, Gallagher, Phillips, Duguid, Robinson, Wilcox.

Game starts at 8:30 p. m.

The Boston Bruins, with four new faces in their lineup, ring up the curtain on the local hockey season at the Garden this evening with the colorful Montreal Maroons as their opponents.

The opening ceremonies add color to an event that needs no color. Any time the Maroons and Bruins mingle customers sit only on the edge of their seats.

Both teams play a similar type of hockey. Hard, crashing, body-checking is the keynote. The Bruins are playing the fiercest checking game in the league.

SUCCESSFUL STYLE

Bruin fans will see five players that did not show on Boston ice last year. Nels Stewart, bad man rival of Eddie Shore has left the Montreal Maroons flat to become a Rossman. Joe Lamb, who belies his name, comes here from Ottawa. Joe will mark time for a few weeks on account of a broken bone in his right arm. Handsome Billy Burch from the Americans, and Ole Heximer from the Rangers via Springfield, are the other new men. Red Beatty, last but not least, was out all last season with a broken leg.

SECOND TRIO

The second line includes Billy Burch, Red Beattie and Ole Hexamer, Harry Oliver, Art Chapman and Perk Galbraith are the third frontier. Perk will return to a defense post when Lamb recovers.

Eddie Shore, Hlich George Owen and Frank Jerwa comprise the outer defense. Tiny Thompson in goal has returned to his brilliant form of two years ago.

The Maroons present a changed forward wall. Hooley Smith will face off against his old teammate, Stewart. Hooley will be flanked by Jimmy Ward and the high scoring "Baldy" Northcott. The second string shows Dave Trottier and Hugh Plaxton, both ex-Toronto varsity with Gordon Bryden.

Lionel Conacher and Cy Wentworth are on the other defense with Flat Walsh in the goal. The spares include Johnny Gallagher, Bill Phillips, Earl Robinson and Paul Haynes.

The Maroons have split even in their first two games. New York Rangers won, 4-2, and then the Maroons came back and slapped Ottawa down. Eddie Gerard has judiciously mixed some fresh blood in with experience and the result is expected to be a winner.

'VANDY' BREAKS WITH TULANE

Nashville, Tenn., Nov. 15 (AP)—Vanderbilt has severed athletic relations with Tulane over the "boning" its coaches and players took when Vanderbilt tied Tulane in New Orleans early this season.

Russ Cowley, member of Vanderbilt's coaching staff and former head football coach of Louisanna State University, announced the break last night and said Louisiana State would replace Tulane on Vanderbilt's 1933 schedule.

Vanderbilt and Louisiana State have met but twice on the football field, once in 1902 and again in 1910. Vandy won both matches. Vandy ranks as one of the top teams of the conference this year and only has ties with Tulane and Tennessee against its record. L. S. U. is unbeaten and untied within the conference.

Brown in Hospital After K. O. Victory

Paris, Nov. 15 (AP)—Panama Al Brown, generally recognized as bantamweight champion of the world, was in the American hospital today suffering from a mild attack of influenza after his second-round knockout of Spider Pladner, French bantam last night.

Hospital authorities said Brown was not seriously ill but would remain in the hospital for a few days' rest.

Ole Heximer, Bruin wing, (where'd he get that first name?) all set for tonight's opening. One of the cleverest shots on ice, an opportunist who is usually there just at the split-second the trouble arises and chock full of Moxie, this youngster may be the sparkplug that will bring the Bruins through this season.

MR. BOSTON

By JACK CONWAY

IT IS PLEASING to occasionally meet an optimist these days when so many people cannot see much brightness in the future.

"I believe the Garden will witness a sellout when Henri DeGlane defends his title against Nick Lutze on Thanksgiving Night," said Paul Bowser. "Of course you know that the profits of the show will go to the Crippled Children's Hospital at Springfield, and that 15,000 Shriners are back of the show.

"The show is being run for a most worthy charity, while the Shriners will help boom the ticket sale. Yet I believe the match by itself would sell out the Garden.

"When DeGlane and Lutze wrestled at the Arena last winter, the show turned away 6000 fans. Thousands of others didn't try to get into the Arena when they learned early on the day of the match that all choice tickets were sold.

"I am sure that DeGlane and Lutze will arouse as much interest in their coming match. Everybody knows that Henri and Nick are marvelous wrestlers and that there won't be an idle minute once they step into action.

Mr. Boston

Wrestling Has Done Well

"WRESTLING HAS stood up in the depression better than any other sport. In fact, during the first two years of the depression, we set new records for attendance at mat carnivals.

"No sport without merit succeeds. Wrestling has drawn huge crowds because the contestants give terrific action. Then the various wrestlers who have shown under my direction all have pet holds.

"Sonnenberg has his flying tackle, Lutze his reverse back fall, DeGlane special arm locks, Lewis the head lock, Stecher the body scissors and so on. The public desires variety and new kind of thrills.

"Lutze will weigh 216 pounds when he meets DeGlane on Thanksgiving night. This will be 20 pounds more than he scaled for the champion last winter. A long campaign last season took 30 pounds off Lutze and sent him into the ring at 196 pounds. This was too light for Nick and he tired after an hour of wrestling. Lutze will have all of his strength for the holiday bout and has a splendid chance of winning.

"With the thought in mind that Lutze may be the next champion I secured an option on his services for six bouts in the event he beats DeGlane. This was the only condition under which I agreed to give Lutze a shot at the champion."

Callahan Must Rest

ANDY CALLAHAN will have to remain idle as a result of the two months' suspension slapped on him by the boxing commission for not going through with his bout with King Tut at the Boston Garden on next Friday night.

Physicians representing the boxing commission claim Callahan is unfit to fight, while Dr. Martin H. Spellman, who examined Callahan last Thursday, says that at that time Callahan was suffering from a strain on his left side. X-ray photographs were taken of Callahan last week, but they didn't show any fracture.

Callahan says he is suffering from pain in his side, and I do not believe any number of doctors can say he isn't. Even medical science has not yet reached a point where it can tell if a person is in pain.

In justice to the Lawrence warrior, I do not believe he is the type to run out of a match.

The two months' suspension will give Callahan an opportunity to recover from his injury, and will not work an injustice to anybody. It also may give some needed steam to the Callahan-Tut bout.

Roller Polo Tonight

ROLLER POLO pops back into our midst tonight when the Milton Eagles and Nahant Pals clash in the opening game of the Roller Polo League at the State Roller Rink, Revere, tonight. Last season this sport gained public favor, and drew large crowds. The players furnish plenty of action.

8 MAT BOUTS AT ARENA TONIGHT

John Kilonis, once light heavyweight wrestling champion, starts a comeback campaign tonight against Archie Campbell, present champion of Canada, in what is expected to be the best of three feature bouts under the direction of Steve McPherson at Boston Arena.

Kilonis will be a favorite to win because of his crafty grappling. The Greek wildman has been kicking around in the wrestling game for so long that there is little he doesn't know about it. Campbell's youth will be in his favor.

The second feature will find George Linnehan battling with Dot O'Hara. Linnehan, former football star at St. Mary's of California, expects to crush O'Hara with flying tackles.

The third feature will be Jack Ellis of Lawrence vs. Lloyd Stewart of Lynn. They put up a hectic bout a week ago and were immediately rematched by Promoter McPherson.

There will be a program of eight bouts at the Arena tonight. The card:

MAIN BOUTS

(Two falls out of three)

John Kilonis vs. Archie Campbell
George Linnehan vs. Pat O'Hara
Jack Ellis vs. Lloyd Stewart

SPECIAL BOUTS

(One fall—20 minute limit)

Nick Karwas vs. Frank Krause
Bob Robins vs. Joe Rojet

PRELIMINARIES

One fall—15 minute limit)

Jackie Nichols vs. Sailor King
Jimmy Lynch vs. Jim Trephon
Pete Stargis vs. Jack Martin

College Stars to Oppose Pros in Stadium, Dec. 10

An all-star collection of college football players is expected to clash with the Boston Braves professional team in a benefit football game to be played at the Harvard Stadium, Dec. 10.

The Braves already have offered their services for the game, the proceeds of which will be turned over for welfare work in Boston and Cambridge.

Leo Leary, former end coach at Harvard, is expected to whip the college team into shape for the game, and already has opened negotiations for players to oppose the team.

Parker Favored to Win Kicking Cup

New Haven, Ct., Nov. 15 (INS)—The annual Ledyard Mitchell football punting contest will be held some day this week at Yale, Coach Mal Stevens announced today.

The cup is presented each year to the athlete who displays the best kicking ability. Dud Parker, winner last year, and who averaged 51 yards each kick in last week's Princeton game, is the favorite to win this year.

TAP'S TRIPLE COMBINATION

Every day the star gazers find food for speculation in the lineup of the astral bodies which, for reasons best known to themselves, bring influences to bear on this mundane world so that certain numbers are bound to appear more than others. The numbers expected to be prominent today you will find in the accompanying cartoon. Watch and see if this isn't true today.

TUFTS STARTS WORK ON TRAP TO HALT BUSH

Lew Manley starts his Tufts gridmen on their final training drive of this season, today, for their encounter with the fast Mass. State team at the Tufts Oval on Saturday.

The Jumbos had a day of rest after their stiff game with B. U., but must work hard for the remainder of the week if they are to stop Louis Bush, which feat would be equivalent to beating State.

Bush is the big threat of the State team. High scorer of the country's college elevens, Bush is one of the most effective attacking units on any team in the East.

He is not a specialist. Not Louis. If he can't throw a pass, or run, he tries catching tosses or perhaps kicks his team out of a tough spot. All the teams which State has played this season have been primed to halt Bush. None has succeeded.

Bush always manages to break away. If he is halted on the first down of a series, he essays a rush on the second. Or the third. Rarely does he fail to break loose on one of his tries of any series.

Tufts must get a defense ready which will minimize the work of Bush, or fail in its windup game. And Tufts has no intention of failing. Beaten only by Brown this season, and then by a small margin, Tufts figures that it can match this season one of its best by conquering State.

A large handicap to Tufts is the absence of Johnny Grinnell, end and ace punter of the team, whose injured leg remains in poor condition. It is not likely that Grinnell will play against State. Roy Wood, worth will take up the kicking burden.

HARVARD-YALE 150-LB. TEAMS MEET TODAY

The postponed battles between Harvard and Yale 150-pound elevens and the contest between the Crimson house champs and Bulldog class leaders will be held this afternoon at Soldiers' Field at 2:30 o'clock.

Originally scheduled for last week the two games missed fire because of the deluge with left Soldiers' Field a mire of mud. Today the 150-pounders will hold the position of honor in the Stadium proper, while the class-house game will be held on the varsity field, forcing the Harvard regulars to hold their afternoon practice on the junior varsity field.

The games bring together four undefeated teams. The Yale lightweights have smothered Villanova 53-0, Lafayette 21-0 and Princeton 20-0 in the three games played this fall and should have little trouble with the Crimson eleven which has had only one real game, in which it was tied 0-0 with the Har ard Grads.

But Winthrop House, which opposes the Yale junior class team will furnish a higher brand of opposition, having cleaned up in all of its seven games in the Interhouse league. The Blue juniors have had two ties along with their three wins.

DORCHESTER ON WITH MEMORIAL

Boston school fans get their entertainment today at Fenway Park when Memorial tackles Dorchester high.

Dorchester, with a heavier eleven is the choice, but Memorial will make its fine step. In Jim Kenney, Memorial back, Dorchester has a great fireman. Jim weighs only 130, but he is rugged, fast and smart.

NAHANT PALS PLAY EAGLES

Roller-polo will come to life again tonight at the State Roller Rink in Revere when the Nahant Pals play the Milton Eagles.

A new league has been formed by President Gene McCarthy consisting of six teams, the Pals, Eagles, Salem Witches, Brockton Blue Moons, Quincy Tigers and State Hockey Club.

Schmeling-Baer Match in the Making

Chicago, Nov. 15 (INS)—A summer-time match between Max Schmeling, former heavyweight champion, and Max Baer of California was projected today by Nate Lewis, Chicago Stadium matchmaker. Lewis said negotiations have been launched to stage the battle at one of the city's two ball parks next summer.

HARVARD SCRIMMAGING OVER FOR SEASON

CASEY DECIDES HE'LL LET WELL ENOUGH ALONE

Following the fine showing of the Harvard line against Holy Cross, Head Coach Eddie Casey has decided to let well enough alone, and will not scrimmage his Crimson cohorts before the Yale game.

The Harvard frontier functioned for the first time in weeks last Saturday. There was some ragged play in the center of the line at times, but this is expected to be rectified with the return of Roger Hallowell, veteran center.

Frank Casale and Francis Crane did not have the benefit of enough practice at the pivot berth before the Holy Cross game to play perfect ball.

HALLOWELL STEADY

With Hallowell back, Harvard has nothing to fear either offensively or defensively. Roger has been all through the mill and if he does not meet up with a reoccurrence of the injury which has forced hi mout of so many games this fall he should be a standout at New Haven.

Now that Capt. Carl Hageman and Tom Nazro, the starting ends, have hit their strides, Irad Hardy and Malcolm Bancroft, the tackles, will give a better account of themselves.

Hardy and Bancroft have not shown up any too strong this season, but they are two great tackles just the same. Weak wing work handicapped their play and doubled their duties, with the result that they have been unable to flash with their usual effectiveness.

HEALTHY AMBITIONS

At present it appears as though Jim Esterly and Herman Gundlack would start at guards against Yale. Jack Hensley, who worried his way to first varsity last week, was injured in the Crusader game and has lost ground. He worked out yesterday, but in a white jersey, which he hoped to discard this afternoon and start his final drive for a regular berth.

After resting last week-end, Jack Crickard should be at the peak of his game against Yale. Any player who is assigned to the No. 3 position in the Harvard backfield must be a glutton for punishment. Either the Crimson offense centers entirely around the No. 3 back or the quarterback has been unable for the most part to think of any other plays. Tim, and again, Crickard, Grady and Petersdorf have found the ball on slow and seven consecutive plays.

Crickard is a tough hombre. He has been taking it for three years. But Grady, Pesky and Locke come to light to stand up under the punishment and if anything should happen to Crickard on the Yale game, Harvard would be in a pad way.

BACKS IN SHAPE

Darby Wells, who has been well seasoned this fall, will direct Crickard, Art Barrett and John Dean next Saturday. Coach Casey has the first string backfield in action for the first time in a week yesterday and will send it through another long drill this afternoon.

Jimmie Knox's scrubs will put on the Yale plays again this afternoon. The first and second varsity eleven will line up against the scrubs, but only in a dummy scrimmage, for it is too late in the season to risk injuries.

Charles Nevin is putting up a real battle to regain his varsity standing. He did not take kindly to Barrett's promotion, and is out to unseat the Portsmouth boy.

Harvard scouts report that Yale has come far of late, and have been predicting this all season and were firmly convinced at the end of the Princeton game. Harvard must turn in its best game of the campaign in the Bowl to beat the Bulldog.

LANE BOOMED AS BIG GREEN GRID COACH

By BILL GRIMES

Annually, at this stage of the football season, rumors to the effect that various coaches are to be replaced, due to the poor showings of their charges, gain large circulation.

At various times this fall, Jack Cannell's name has been mentioned as one of the New England mentors who will be let out. Dartmouth has denied this rumor and called attention to the fact that Cannell has two years to go on his contract. The authorities at Hanover did not admit, however, that there is a question of money to be straight ened out before Cannell is definite ly signed up beyond this year.

The Dartmouth Athletic Council expects to receive numerous protests from alumni all over the country as a result of the failure of the Big Green this season.

LOST FOUR MAJOR GAMES

After the Cornell game, Dartmouth alumni began to take stock and from their researches discovered that the Big Green was on the short end of all four major contests, Penn, Harvard, Yale and Cornell, and for a Dartmouth team to be beaten by elevens of the caliber of Harvard and Yale this season is too much for the old grads.

From the Hawley regime, when Dartmouth ranked high, football material has flocked to Hanover. Invarishly, the prep school stars lean towards colleges that are winning on the gridiron. During the past 10 years, an unusually large number of outstanding players have matriculated at Dartmouth. And, still more important, for the past four or five years, the football players have been good students. The alumni realizes that the Big Green has had the material and therefore is at a loss to understand why better teams have not been developed.

Among the New England alumni, there are many who feel that Myles Lane should be in charge of football at Hanover. Lane played three years as a regular halfback under Jesse Hawley.

SMART FOOTBALL MAN

During his undergraduate days Lane knew more football than any other man on the squad. He is a smart player and since taking over the head coaching berth at Bost University has shown himself to be a smart coach.

Myles has always been a staunch supporter of the Hawley offense. As soon as he signed to coach the Terriers, he announced that he would use the Hawley system, an indication that he knew his football, and then he went out and signed up John "Tiny" McMannon and succeeded the former Notre Dame player to coach the line.

Under Lane, McMannon and Tony Colucci, who has charge of the ends, B. U. is winding up its first season with but two wins, two ties and two defeats. Due to the fact that the Hawley offense and Lane's system of drive and play dovetails perfectly, the Lane-McMannon-Colucci combination should be a tough machine to represent B. U. despite the noticeable lack of man power, and scarcity of material.

DESERVES CHANCE

Although the Boston University Athlet c Council has voted to retain Lane, McMannon and Colucci, no contracts have been signed.

Lane is not overly qualified to handle the football situation at Dartmouth but he is deserving of an opportunity. He was a brilliant letter man at Dartmouth, starring in football hockey and baseball. He played football in college and allowed to select his staff, undoubtedly he would take McMannon and Colucci with him, which would give Dartmouth three outstanding mentors.

YALE TO RELY ON LATERALS

New Haven, Nov. 15—The lateral pass, once Harvard's exclusive property and a lethal weapon against Yale in past Bowl encounters, may be turned on its sponsors when the Bulldog and John ranvard come to their annual reckoning here Saturday.

Mal Stevens has adopted the sidefling in his grid stock furnished to all Yale's quarterbacks. They will be expected to use this thrust against the Crimson this week.

Although Stevens began tutoring his backs in the art of advancing the ball forward and sideways, the maneuver has been conspicuously under cover all season.

A slight indication of what Harvard may expect in the way of Eli offense was shown in the Princeton game, where Yale used the lateral with success.

Coach Stevens declared today that the recent Princeton deadlock left his Yale squad physically unscathed, and that he expects the club to reach its absolute peak against Harvard.

Brushing several indirect criticisms of the judgment shown by the Yale quarterbacks, especially Curtin, in the Princeton game, Stevens indicated that the Elis were under wraps during the game with Harvard, however. Stevens expects the Yales to trot out much that is now unsuspected in grid strategy.

The Yale squad will have little work this week, concentrating on blocking and assignment work. Stress will be laid on the Eli passing attack today and tomorrow, with a light workout on Thursday, formally closing the preliminary campaign.

Sale of tickets for the annual Harvard-Yale classic continues to be light.

John L. Puts Stamp of Approval on McCoy as Great Fighter

By KID McCOY
As told to Lee Smits

Copyright, 1932, by Boston American and King Features Synd.

CHAPTER XXVI

The man who had driven me in his carriage, for $20, was a friend of Toler's and as soon as possible informed him that Kid McCoy had loaned the northbound train did cuisel as a Negro.

There were two detectives on the train, bound to St. Louis on another errand, and they received a wire to look out for me. I saw them strolling through the Jim Crow car. Their big feet gave them away and presently Homer and Doc Payne heard them say that they had recognized Kid McCoy, but that they would wait until they got to St. Louis before they arrested him.

I swung off at the next stop, grabbed the hind end as I had watched so many times in my hobo days, and climbed into the top berth of a section Homer had.

Figuring several indirect criticisms of the judgment shown by the Yale quarterbacks, especially Curtin, in the Princeton game, Stevens indicated that the Elis were under wraps during the game with Harvard, however. Stevens expects the Yales to trot out much that is now unsuspected in grid strategy.

The Yale squad will have little work this week, concentrating on blocking and assignment work. Stress will be laid on the Eli passing attack today and tomorrow, with a light workout on Thursday, formally closing the preliminary campaign.

Sale of tickets for the annual Harvard-Yale classic continues to be light.

What Has Gone Before

A possessor of ring fame and plenty of money after fighting up from a hobo's life, Kid McCoy is possessor of world middleweight title. He signs to fight Tommy Ryan again and is given a drink. Later he bozes in Hot Springs, Ark., disguises himself as an old Negro and boards a train when he finds there is a warrant out for his arrest.

I wrote to me and we have corresponded ever since. I made Con Riley, my old friend and manager, a present of my Dayton saloon.

Marries Julia

Juliet got her divorce, and in the spring of 1898 we were married by Mayor Fisk of Mount Vernon, N. Y. We rented a small apartment on West 107th st., which was a quiet, uptown residential neighborhood. Julia and I were completely happy.

Our best friends were Bob Fitzsimmons, his wife and his manager, Martin Julian. Martin Julian and Rose, his sister—who was Mrs. Fitzsimmons—had been an acrobatic team in vaudeville.

Fitz lived in Far Rockaway, and we visited back and forth and dined together frequently. Fitz always seemed to me more like a kid than a grownup.

I posted a $5000 forfeit with Richard K. Fox of the Police Gazette to meet Fitz. Both Corbett and Fitz were touring the country with shows. Neither was anxious to get into the ring again.

There was a lot of newspaper talk, mostly bunk. I taunted Fitz, and Fitz was reported as calling me conceited. But our friendship never was in peril for a moment.

In fact, back of the reluctance of Fitz to fight with me was the determination of Mrs. Fitzsimmons that he and I should never face each other in the ring.

My proclamation that I was willing to meet any of them greatly increased my popularity. I was likened to John L. Sullivan, and the great John L. himself made public his approval of me. I was, he said, the outstanding fighter of the day.

It was in the spring of 1898 that I was matched with a truly dangerous heavyweight, Gus Ruhlin, who fought Jim Jeffries a 20-round draw a year before.

Gray Manager

Ignoring the taboo against wives in training camps, I took Julia with me to Excelsior Springs, Mo., where I began training for Ruhlin.

We had given up our flat on West 107th st. and had taken a brownstone mansion at 249 West 44th.

We had servants, and Billy Gray, the song writer, became my manager.

It was on the evening of May 20, 1898, when Gus Ruhlin and I entered the ring in the Empire Athletic Club in Syracuse.

The country was in a ferment over the impending war with Spain.

Just before the fight Jim Corbett got into the ring and announced that he would fight the winner. This was a surprise to every one, and the best possible news to me.

I put Ruhlin to pieces in 20 rounds, although he kept on his feet and was full of fight to the end. The worst injury I received was to my hands, which were swollen and painful from chopping at Ruhlin's face.

Only the other day I read of the complete collapse of Joe Walcott, a marvelous fighter in his prime. The statement was made that Tom O'Rourke while Walcott's manager had posted $5000 for Walcott to meet either me or Corbett and that we had both side-stepped.

When I left Dayton to fight Goddard, on Dec. 16, 1898, I had just come from a tour of the New England states in a vaudeville act, meeting all comers, accompanied always by Julia.

Wife Very Ill

In Bridgeport, Conn., I had knocked out Dick Moore in one round. In Bridgeport I got a had cold and Ben Benton (Rob Roy), who was with me at the time, persuaded me to stay in a hot bath when we got to Philadelphia, half an hour before I got into the ring.

The law in Pennsylvania limited a "boxing exhibition" to six rounds, I knew there weren't more than two rounds of good fighting in me. For four rounds I ran away from Goddard, while the crowd yelled in derision.

Goddard begged me to come on and fight. When I came up for the fifth round I started in with three snappy lefts that rocked Goddard's head back violently and then with a left uppercut drove him through the ropes.

I helped him back before he had any time to recover and hit him on the jaw with my right and sent him through the ropes again.

The next time I reached out to help him he swore and kicked at me. He crawled through the ropes, in a blind rage, grabbed me by the legs and tried to throw me out of the ring. Then Referee Schlichter disqualified Goddard and gave me the decision.

After the fight I got a telegram from St. Vincent's Hospital: "Your wife very ill with typhoid."

Tomorrow Kid McCoy tells of his wife's nearly fatal illness and his fight with Tom Sharkey.

$250 For Refereeing

As the train started up again, I swung off and hailed Doyle, who had started to drive away. The next night, in East St. Louis, I got $250 for refereeing a fight. That is how a champion made his money in that era, and it seemed like big money to me.

Fitzsimmons, Corbett and McCoy were now the center of fight talk in sporting circles everywhere. The British papers gave us much space. Fitz and I were actually middleweights.

I had the most to gain by whipping either of them, since they were both classed as heavyweights, while they both had a lot to lose by meeting me.

After Fitzsimmons knocked out Corbett in Carson City, Nev.—with his famous solar plexus blow—it was Fitzsimmons that was between me and the heavyweight title—Fitz, my old friend and mentor.

I was determined to get a match with him.

Lottie readily obtained her divorce in Middletown, and it was no longer necessary for me to be listed as a leading citizen of Dayton, O. I gave Lottie half, or more of my bankroll—I actually don't remember how much.

Although she actually charged me with being too friendly with other women, we parted on friendly terms, and when my trouble came in Los Angeles, she promptly

Chase Overshadows Minute Men, 60 to 1

By GEORGE E. PHAIR

Time was when Yale and Princeton met before a chosen throng.

But now a common bloke may get a ticket for a song.

Depression with a deadly clout has knocked the spectators out.

Even with the Pennsylvania Railroad selling football tickets, the Yale-Princeton game, once a sell-out, failed to draw anything like a full house this year. It looks like a dull winter for the over-emphasis hoys.

The old Minute Men of New England are overshadowed by Bob Chase, a lad who totes the pigskin for dear old Brown. In the last five games Bob has played with but a substitute, which makes him a sixty-minute man

"Beat the unbeaten," is the slogan at Providence, where the Brown Huskies are doing their stuff. Yale, Harvard, Tufts, Holy Cross and Columbia were all unwalloped until they mingled with Brown, comes Colgate, unbeaten, untied and its goal line unsullied. Something is bound to happen when these two clubs go into a huddle on Thanksgiving day.

While Colgate has maintained an immaculate goal line, Cooper Union has skidded through the season without registering a touchdown, winning undisputed possession of the pacifist championship.

Notre Dame is convalescing after that unexpected jolt in Pittsburgh. There is reason to suspect that the cadets will have their hands full of football when they mingle with the South Benders a week from Saturday.

GOLDBERG'S CARTOONS

A Sad, Sad Story

GIRL DEMANDS $25,000 FROM EX-EMPLOYER

Denial of charges in the $25,000 suit of Cecelia M. Davis, his former stenographer, that she devoted herself to him, and assertion he would fight the case, were made today by counsel for Harold G. Chatfield, socially prominent granite company official.

Miss Davis suit, filed yesterday in Suffolk Superior Court, alleged that after continued advances by Chatfield and his promise of a life job, she had given up all her own friends and devoted herself entirely to him.

VISITED HIS HOME

J. R. MacKenzie, attorney for Miss Davis, in a statement supporting her declaration, said:

"Miss Davis was given to understand that Chatfield was virtually separated from his wife, and that he might some day marry her.

"At one time, when he learned that Miss Davis was invited to a dance by a man friend, he told her his heart would be broken if she went with any other man.

"Miss Davis accompanied Chatfield on several trips about the country, and often visited his home when his family was away.

CITES HIS PROMISES

"Miss Davis is not the hold-up type. She is destitute."

The declaration recites that after being absent from her work for some time through illness she returned and learned she was discharged. She claims she is out of field and said she would be forced to institute proceedings. The declaration claims Chatfield persuaded her against this on his promise to pay her $75 monthly. This promise was also broken, she claims.

Cecilia's mother became hysterical at her daughter's suit, leaving of her daughter's suit. Although Cecilia lives at home, she had not told the family anything about it, and they learned of it for the first time from the newspapers.

"LIKE THE FURNITURE"

"Why, ythe whole thing is ridiculous," said Mrs. Davis. "Cecilia is the 'old maid' of the family. She hasn't been out nights for a year. I can't believe that she ever filed this suit."

Cecilia's sister Grace likewise said she couldn't believe the story.

"Cecilia has always been old-fashioned, and from the way she spoke of Mr. Chatfield, I had an idea that he regarded her as nothing more than piece of furniture," she said.

Chatfield, an official of the Vermont Quarries, Inc., of Websterville, was in Geneva, N. Y., today and could not be reached for any personal comment on the suit.

However, E. Dwight Fullerton, his attorney, declared for him that there was no foundation to the attractive stenographer's story.

Agawam Man Dies of Hunting Wounds

Greenfield, Nov. 15 (AP)—Frank M. Johnson, 40, of Agawam, died in Franklin County Hospital here today of a gunshot wound suffered November 6 while hunting near his summer home in Jacksonville, Vt. The shot was fired by a cousin, Loren Page of Jacksonville, who mistook for a fox a pet dog owned by another cousin, Elliott Morse. Page fired several shots, one of which struck Johnson.

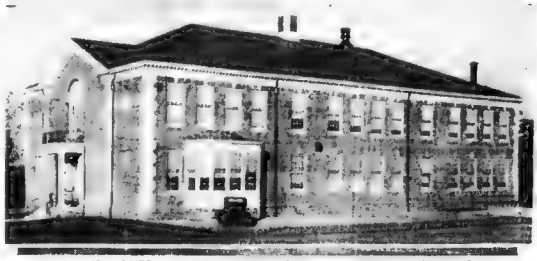
Educational Leaders of Capital in Tribute to Memory of Mrs. Phoebe Hearst



Here is a view of Washington's new Phoebe Apperson Hearst school—named for and dedicated to a pioneering American woman, who devoted much of her time and energy to the education of youth. A distinguished audience saw two of her grandsons, William Randolph Hearst, Jr., and John Hearst, sons of the publisher, present the school with a fountain and aquarium, gifts of their father in memory of his mother. (Int. News Photos.)

By WILLIAM DOHERTY

Washington, Nov. 15 (U.S.)—"A worthy monument to the most public-spirited woman of her period."

In these words, Senator Royal S. Copeland, of New York, last night epitomized an eloquent tribute to Mrs. Phoebe Apperson Hearst, mother of William Randolph Hearst, in dedicating the new Phoebe Apperson Hearst school here.

The memorial to one of the foremost educators of the country, pioneer in kindergarten instruction and founder of the parent-teacher organizations, was received by the heads of the District of Columbia school system.

Two grandsons of Mrs. Hearst, William Randolph Hearst, Jr., and John Hearst presented a fountain and aquarium given by the publisher in memory of his mother.

A bronze tablet was presented on behalf of the National Congress of Parents and Teachers, bearing an excerpt of the address by Mrs. Herbert Hoover at the cornerstone laying of the school last year, in which Mrs. Hearst was held up as the ideal of California womanhood. The quotation follows.

While she lived, her name always stood for that which was best.

"Here was a real service to humanity and it is going on even as her spirit is going on, in the inspiration she planted in the fields of education."

LAUDS SCHOOL SYSTEM

Speaking for his father and his brother, William Randolph Hearst, Jr., said:

"Every true American citizen today has a deep interest in our common school system. If I were asked to name the one which contributes most to the American democratic ideal and to American citizenship I would say that it is the common school system. In this particular school I have a personal interest. It honors the memory of my grandmother, Phoebe Hearst, than whom no one ever had a deeper concern for the youth of America.

"You will recall that my brother and I were given the privilege of laying the cornerstone for this school some months ago. It is a further tribute and honor to be permitted to participate in these ceremonies of dedication.

"My father, William Randolph Hearst, has the same warm spirit in his heart for this school that my brother and I have, for it bears the name of his mother. The fountain and aquarium in the kindergarten room were given by him as a slight expression of his appreciation for the action taken by the school authorities in perpetuating the name of Phoebe Hearst."

FITTING MEMORIAL

Senator Copeland said it was particularly fitting that there should be a memorial to Mrs. Hearst in the national capital, and equally fitting that that memorial should be a public school. He added:

"Many a person conspicuous for humane deeds does not live to receive the appreciation of those who have benefited by his acts. There are thousands yet unborn who will feel the effects of Mrs. Hearst's generous heart and well-laid plans.

"But in her own life-time, on the occasion of her 70th birthday, 3000 students of the University of California united in sending her a mammoth loving cup and written greetings in token of their affection."

Pointing out that among Mrs. Hearst's final efforts were kindergarten classes for the poor, in San Francisco, the Senator added:

"Phoebe Hearst had vision. When she established her kindergartens, she knew she was doing the thing that would create a thirst for knowledge. When she built her libraries, she was providing the fountains where that thirst could be satisfied.

"When she promoted the education of women, she was preparing the future mothers of America and fitting them for their responsibilities to the next generation of children.

"Before Phoebe Apperson married United States Senator George Hearst, she was a teacher. Her happy marriage, with all the acclaim that wealth and social position brings, never changed the heart of that noble woman."

Senator Copeland told how Miss Hearst established the manual training school at San Francisco, established and maintained a training school for kindergarten teachers in Washington and launched the National Cathedral School for Girls in the capital, at a cost of $250,000. He said the most noteworthy of her undertakings in the field of higher education was the upbuilding of the University of California at Berkeley.

MOE MARK LEFT 3 TO 6 MILLION

White Plains, N. Y., Nov. 15 (AP)—Moe Mark, millionaire theatrical man, pioneer moving picture developer and one of the leading stockholders in Warner Brothers, left all of his estate, estimated at from $3,000,000 to $6,000,000 to his immediate family, his will disclosed today.

The will, dated July 11, 1929, was filed with Surrogate Silkman today. Mark died on a train at Utica two weeks ago.

The bulk of the estate goes to his widow, Elsie Ruth Mark. Two-fifths are to be held in trust in equal shares for two children, Thelma Ray Mark and Cortland R. Mark.

A sliding scale of payments of the principal to the children is specified in the will, after each reaches the age of 25. The son will get the whole bequest when he is 35 and the daughter her total bequest when she is 40.

A codicil, dated July 28, 1932 struck out bequests in the will. They were to a sister, Rose Rosenthal, Buffalo, of $20,000, and $2,500 each to two nephews, Robert Rosenthal and Lionel Edel, both of Buffalo.

The will provides that $10,000 shall go to Mr Mark's mother Mrs Amalie Marcus of Cleveland.

Youngquist Leads Fight on Capone

Washington, Nov. 15 (AP)—Asst Atty-Gen. C. Aaron Youngquist who has charge of prohibition cases, left Washington today for Atlanta, to direct the government's case against Al Capone's latest attempt to win freedom from his 10-year penitentiary sentence.

Capone, Chicago gang leader, is seeking through habeas corpus proceedings to escape his lengthy sentence.

Jersey Boy Dies of Football Hurts

CRIME ENDS IN 'SHOWERS' SAYS KELLIHER

"Whether you make one dollar or 40 million dollars at something not on the level—the ultimate end is the showers."

Jack "Big Bill" Kelliher talking ladies and gentlemen—William J. "Big Bill" Kelliher, who today is starting life all over again for a third time after having paroled yesterday from State Prison.

The convicted bank wrecker and swindler and one-time high-stakes better in the days when he had it, is making a new beginning at 57, with his wife and son in a Roxbury flat—but this time it will be different.

"If I could live all over again I would be satisfied with a position that would pay me a salary just big enough to provide the necessaries of life," he said. "That's enough for anyone.

"I'm all through with life on the gay white way. I've thrown away thousands of dollars in a single day. I've never known the meaning of happiness. I enjoyed the glamour of it all, but with them it rode to a fall.

"When you make money at crime it runs through your hands like water. I remember as if it were yesterday when I placed the largest single bet, in 1906, on the Cubs to beat the White Sox in their first and only World Series. The bet was $26,000 against $50,000. I lost, but I paid, laughing.

"You can't get away with it permanently. Perhaps you will for a while, but you eventually get caught."

"Big Bill" who appears in perfect health, said he had been offered two business propositions for his first start, one with a mining company in Colorado and the other with a music oil concern.

It will be necessary, however, for him to secure permission from the parole board to leave the state.

Police Radios Increase

Washington, Nov. 15 (AP)—Police departments over the country were reported today by the radio division of the Commerce Department to be operating 79 short wave radio sets, one more than headquarters to report only an increase of 26 in the past year.

Off Gay Life

William J. "Big Bill" Kelliher, paroled from state prison at 57 years of age, vows he is through with the gay white way for life. He has had two offers of good jobs to begin life all over again.

HUNDREDS DIE IN HONDURAS

Tegucigalpa, Honduras, Nov. 15 (AP)—A sudden revolution, lasting 24 hours and waged between Federal and "Liberal" forces in battle today that claimed the lives of several hundred men.

The insurgent Liberals, defeated in the presidential election two weeks ago, started hostilities by capturing Nacaome, key city of southern Honduras, and San Pedro in the north.

Reports to the capital said Federals were counter-attacking, and so fierce was the fighting that hundreds were dead.

There was no outbreak in the capital, but the situation was reported as "threatening."

Federal troops were reported hurrying toward Comayagua in panic portion of an attack, and fighting was reported at Puerto Cortes.

Bridge Good or Bad? Well, Did You Win or Lose?

By J. C. OESTREICHER
International News Service Staff Correspondent.

New York, Nov. 15 (INS)—Thirty million persons today are struggling with the intricacies of contract bridge. What is the intellectual significance of the game and the possible mental effect upon those who play?

Is a "mania akin to marathon dancing," "Is it potentially harmful to the brain cells" Do its players rank high or low among symptoms of mental ...?

In an effort to determine the mental and psychological effects of the game claiming more adherents than any other pastime in history, International News Service canvassed leaders of thought and opinion in medical, scientific, literary and educational fields.

OPINIONS GALORE.

Almost everyone ... something to say. Some were kind some cruel. Here are a few of their verdicts:

"Contract bridge is a mania like marathon dancing. The fact that it uses minds instead of legs makes no difference. In both cases you have intense energy directed at nothing of importance and the result is futility."

Dr. Morris Fishbein, Chicago physician and editor of the Journal of the American Medical Association.

"Contract bridge is the best card game I know. I use it for relaxation. I doubt that it hurts any mind and it probably helps some. Nevertheless, the other three members of my foursome—Braun, Warren and West—frequently make bids that indicate mental aberration and I have heard them insist that I am occasionally peculiar."

CAN BE DANGEROUS

Dr. Royal S. Copeland, United States Senator from New York.

"I approve and heartily endorse anything in the way of healthy recreation. Everybody requires some appealing avocation. Just what that shall be depends on the particular sort of monotonous grind demanded by the daily occupation. For persons whose work demands close mental application, night after night at contract bridge places too great a strain on brain and nerve cells already exhausted. There should be temperance in our games as in the diet. Intemperate indulgence in this particular game will, in my opinion, do harm."

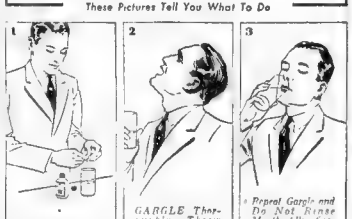
NOW! EASE A SORE THROAT INSTANTLY

Feel Rawness, Irritation, Go At Once

These Pictures Tell You What To Do



1 Crush and Dissolve 3 Bayer Aspirin Tablets in Half a Glass of Water.

2 GARGLE Thoroughly—Then Let Your Head Way Back, Allowing a Little to Trickle Down Your Throat.

3 Repeat Gargle and Do Not Rinse Mouth, Allow Gargle to Remain on Membranes of the Throat for Prolonged Effect.

Remember Only Medicine Helps A Sore Throat

Modern medical science now throws an entirely new light on sore throat. A way that stops the pain, rawness and irritation in as little as two or three minutes.

Results are among the most extraordinary in medical science. On doctors' advice, millions are following this way . . . discarding old-time "washes" and "antiseptics." For it has been found that only medicine can help a sore throat.

Simple To Do. All you do is crush and dissolve three BAYER Aspirin Tablets in half a glass of water. Gargle with it twice—as pictured above. If you have any indication of a cold—before gargling take 2 Bayer Aspirin Tablets with a full glass of water. Then to combat any signs of cold that have gone into your system, Keep on taking of cold has a "hold." For Genuine Bayer Aspirin will not harm you. Your doctor will tell you, it does not depress the heart. Get a box of 12 or a bottle of 100 at any drug store.

Reduces Infection, Eases Pain Instantly. Gargling with Bayer Aspirin will do three things: Relieve soreness at once. Allay inflammation, AND—reduce infection; which is the important thing in fighting a sore throat.

It requires medicine—like BAYER ASPIRIN—to do these things! That is why specialists throughout America are prescribing this BAYER gargle in place of old-time ways. Results are quick and amazing.

Be careful, however, that you get real BAYER Aspirin Tablets for this purpose. For they dissolve completely enough to gargle without leaving irritating particles. Watch this when you buy.

LEADERS FIGHT FOR CONTROL OF G. O. P.

Washington, Nov. 15—A battle for control of a reorganized Republican party today appeared inevitable.

Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler has precipitated the fight sooner than most party leaders desired. He preferred to let matters simmer for a while.

In spite of his crushing rebuke at the polls political intimates of President Hoover asserted this seeming confidence, that he was far from being out of the political picture.

There have been reports for weeks past of a movement on foot to oust the present leadership of the party and to replace it with a new one. Some of the Democratic leaders have been known to express the hope that the Republicans would do just that thing.

The name of Frank O. Lowden, New York political man, today has been mentioned as the head of a Republican reorganization. The fight could come, it was said, between Lowden and Senator Moses of New Hampshire.

And at House headquarters it was that old guard leader, Representative Carl Soelgle, of Minnesota, declared that the President-elect should be permitted to take over the party machinery and build up a new organization of his own design.

There is some doubt as to how long Everett Sanders will remain as national chairman, due to his close connection with Coolidge politically in the event that support of Senator David A. Reed of Pennsylvania and Secretary of the Treasury Ogden L. Mills appears to push them actively for party leadership. Reed decided to take a much better chance of position than Mills. Reed remains in the Senate and Mills, a former member, passes from public office with Hoover.

IRISH FOREIGN TO BRITAIN

London, Nov. 15 (AP)—The Irish Free State became a foreign country today in its trade relations with the United Kingdom-Empire customs preference as the tariff act passed last autumn expired at midnight and brought goods from the Free State under provisions of the general tariff. Some articles then had been exempt a year.

The imperial effort was to foster practically all manufactured articles from Southern Ireland to a 10 per cent ad valorem duty, and to boost the special duties on cattle from 40 to 50 per cent and special duty on poultry, eggs and beef product from 20 to 40 per cent.

The new duties came into effect automatically through failure of the Free State to negotiate a trade agreement with the United Kingdom at the Ottawa conference in the summer.

How Fast Is Money? New Riddle for These Times

By GILBERT SELDES

When I first heard a group of experts talk about the velocity of bank deposits" and "the velocity of currency" I was abashed; they were talking English, using words I knew, and yet I did not understand what was being said. And yet it appears that if you ask, How fast is money? you are not being an economic moron, but are pointing to one of the prime factors in our possible recovery. The Business Week's publication issued by a division of the Alexander Hamilton Institute which was sent me by a friend who, I fear was skeptical of my knowledge of finance) makes the subject remarkably clear when it says: "If five men are seated around a table, each owing $10 to the man on his right, and one hands his creditor ten dollars, the same bill will settle $50 worth of debts. A dollar turn passes it on

But remark that "If a business man, he runs that a dollar will be worth more tomorrow he will not be anxious to spend it for he sees the dollar will be less valuable in the future. In Germany, after the war it was not a question of today's dollar compared with tomorrow's. It was a question of the value of the mark at 10 in the morning and at one in the afternoon. The mark was worth so much less in one o'clock that workers were paid off twice a day and their wives tried to get to the stores and run off to spend the money on food and clothes and anything, even if it got only ten or fifteen minutes or a few hours a new quotation might come which would cut the value in half.

Money is queer and perhaps the queerest thing about it is that if we want people to spend it freely we can make sure that it will by telling them that tomorrow it will hardly be worth spending. That is to say, it would be a good thing for America to speed up the circuits of money, and yet it would be a dangerous thing to issue green backs—which is the reason why to make people spend what they [illegible]

Romantic Democrats

I am impressed by the wild, crazy, foolish romantic aim of professional politicians. The Argonauts, Marco Polo, the Forty-Niners, and all leaders of desperate adventures and daring hopes are nothing in comparison with the men who run political campaigns. Imagine them with millions spend most be of their lives use up prodigious energy, impair their digestions, make enemies, lose friends as with one chance in ten or one in 50 of winning. Look over the record of the last twenty years in this country since the Civil War in terms of a century, only two men have been elected President by the Democrats, and 16 times have fallen to the nominees of the Democratic party. Consider their chances when Roosevelt (Theodore) ran for his first full term, could they have been more than one in a dozen? Consider the chances of Mr. Cox against Mr. Harding, when obviously the country was sore and disappointed, what chance had he? Short of a miracle what could have stopped Mr. Coolidge in his campaign? Yet in all of these Democrats labored, knowing that the odds were all against them, and even, I suppose, believed that they had chances.

Failure of Socialism Pronounced, Democrats in Power to Stay

By ROBERT E. ROGERS

IN 1896 the Democratic Party absorbed and digested the Populist Party, the radical farmer group. In the same year the Free Silver party was so thoroughly and finally associated with the Democracy that it never thereafter had any separate existence.

E. E. ROGERS

In 1932 it looks as if the Democratic Party had similarly absorbed most of the Socialist Party. The advance claims of that party to a vote of five millions, three millions and, finally, two millions dwindled in the actual election to less than one million, a very disappointing showing to the Socialists and even somewhat surprising to the onlookers.

This is all the more interesting when one considers the vote polled by the Socialists in past elections.

In 1900 Debs polled a polled a popular vote of 94,768. In 1904 Debs again polled a vote of 402,400. In 1908 Debs received 420,820 votes. In 1912 Debs polled 897,000' and this in a four-cornered contest with Taft, Roosevelt and Wilson.

Why Debs' Vote Beat Thomas'

In 1916 Benson polled 585,113. In 1920 Debs polled 919,799 votes and in 1924, when the Socialist party joined with the La Follette Progressives, the vote was 4,822,856, the largest protest or third party vote ever polled. In 1928 with Thomas as a candidate the Socialist vote fell away badly to 267,420. This year if it reaches one million it will apparently be doing well.

One reason for this presents itself at once; that Thomas is nowhere near as good a vote-getter as Debs was. Everyone has praised his campaign. He was universally respected. The newspapers have treated him very well. But apparently his very fairness and mildness and moderation is a liability to him. People who voted for Debs, the old fire-eater and deliberate martyr, knew what they were voting for. But apparently the Socialist electorate of 1932 did not see sufficient difference between Thomas and Roosevelt to make it worth their while to make a protest gesture. That, or they were willing to sacrifice their party if only to be sure that Mr. Hoover were retired from office.

Nevertheless, when one remembers that the total vote has doubled since 1920, it becomes obvious that Debs' vote of nearly one million in 1912 represented a far greater triumph for his cause than Mr. Thomas' 1932 vote.

But to go back to the third party movements. My contention is that the Democratic party has slowly but surely become the heir and assignee of most of the important third party movements since the Civil War. These were the results of western agrarian discontent, or, to a lesser extent, of eastern industrial discontent. The Populists swallowed up the Greenbackers. The Free Silverites swallowed up the Populists and for one campaign, that of 1896, dominated the Democrats. But in the campaign of 1900 the Free Silver issue and the Populist issue were dead and the Democratic party survived.

Democratic and Republican Differences

Of the Progressive vote of four million in 1912, it is reasonable to suppose that a good share eventually went back to the Republicans, but the fact that Socialists and Progressives together could poll nearly five million in 1924 showed that the protest movement was still strong. But since no one has emerged to take the place of La Follette and since the Socialist vote sunk to a quarter of a million in 1928, it is obvious that the Democratic party has been the chief beneficiary of this vote, which included also the various western groups, such as the Non- Partisan League, the Farm Bloc votes and others of the sort.

It is not too much to say, therefore, that today we really have two parties that represent opposite sides of the political shield. For years it has been fashionable to say -and Mr. Thomas has been saying it copiously—that there is no difference between Republicans and Democrats. I do not believe that can be said any longer.

In the first place Mr. Hoover drew the issue between the two parties more clearly and exactly than it has been drawn since Mark Hana's time. Mr. Hoover deliberately and repeatedly stated the Republican philosophy of big business and repeatedly stated it so that there was no ground for mistaking it. The Republican vote was a vote of convinced Hamiltonians of the old school.

The Democratic position, on the other hand, although it was never so clearly defined, was obviously liberal and even radical enough to gather into its fold all the remnants of all the parties of protest that have existed for at least the past generation. The Communist and other votes were negligible and the old line Socialist vote amazingly small.

Democrats Seem in to Stay

That means, so far as one can see, that Mr. Roosevelt has a powerful mandate from every wing and block of American political liberalism. He inherits the mantle of the old Jeffersonians, of the faithful Wilsonians, of the Bryanites and the La Follette followers, and, apparently, of many of the Debs legions who refused to follow the mild and theoretical Mr. Thomas. The Democratic party, then, by sheer force of numbers becomes the party of Liberalism, opposed to the party of pure Conservatism, a condition which our political critics have been wishing for over a long period of time.

This seems to be in accord with what our political historians have always believed, that America is essentially a country of two-party government. If this is so, it is obviously better to have two powerful parties, clear cut in their policies and consistent in their practices, than to have three parties plus a bloc or two. The Republicans have shown themselves clearly and deliberately as the Tories of our State.

The Democrats have an unequalled opportunity to become the Liberals in every best sense of the word. If they take advantage of this opportunity and can subdue sectional and religious and economic differences within the party to a program of Liberalism, I look forward to a considerable period of time in which the Democrats will hold the reins of power, corresponding to the Republican tenure of office for the generatin or two following the Civil War.

The Republicans will be relying, of course, on the lessons of the past, on the experience of 1888, of 1896, and of 1920. But I doubt very much whether under these new conditions the lessons of the past are going to cut much ice. It is a condition now and not a theory—as Grover Cleveland said.

TRAFFIC SQUAD IN CAMBRIDGE ABOLISHED

Every Captain Is Also to Be Shifted in City's Biggest Police Shakeup

The Cambridge police traffic squad will be abolished and every captain in the department shifted to his first call in one of the most astounding moves ever made in the department, it was exclusively learned by the Boston Evening American today.

All men now assigned to traffic duty will be given regular patrolmen's beats for routine work. Capt. Joseph Donahue, at present in charge of the traffic squad and one of one of the two traffic experts in the state, will be given command of one of the four districts in the city.

There are six other captains to be transferred. One of them now in command of a district as well will be shifted to night duty.

PATROLMEN IMMUNE

No patrolmen will be shifted from their present duties. Only in one or two cases will captains officers be given the rank of captains be transferred.

The figure signed will not be affected. Sergt. Charles H. Dyke will remain at its head.

It is expected, however, that an entire wholesale reorganization of the department will be seen later.

There has been considerable talk regarding the shift. No official information was forthcoming from any source however until the Boston Evening American exclusively learned of the transfers today.

SECOND RUSSELL SHIFT

It will be the second time within the regime of Mayor Richard M. Russell that the department has been practically turned upside down in regard to transfers.

Rumors were current some time ago regarding the shakeup in the traffic squad but at that time it was not known as serious [illegible] nation.

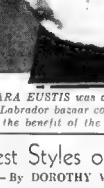
Latest Styles of Fashionables

By DOROTHY WHIPPLE FRY

FROM TIME TO TIME during this season of gaieties we have seen Miss Elizabeth Butler, debutante daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Morgan Butler of Dedham. Miss Butler is dark with brown wavy hair and she has brown eyes with a whimsical expression in their depths. She wears her hair parted on the side and done low in her neck.

She wears a chic green afternoon frock that is very becoming. The coat has a fur trimmed cape.



Frances Seaver

Incidentally the young lady resembles her aunt, who before her marriage was Miss Miriam Butler, daughter of Senator Butler.

Another delightful young lady who is also making her formal bow to society this season is Miss Frances Seaver. She has light brown hair and merry blue eyes. She is one of the most popular "debs" of the season. She is the daughter of Mr. Robert Seaver of Brookline and was one of the guests of honor at a debutante luncheon last week given by Mrs. Robert C. Seaver, Mrs. Carles Samson and Mrs. Henry Simonds. Miss Karolyn Samson also made her debut on this charming and delightful occasion. Miss Samson is tall and slender with glossy dark hair that falls in lovely waves about her face She looks smart this season in a black velvet afternoon gown with a white satin vest.

Have you noticed how chic Miss Helen Homans looks in her smart and well fitted riding outfit of dark blue coat and light tan breeches. She wears a black derby.

Return to Town

MRS. RALPH HORNBLOWER has returned from her home at Squibnocket at Marthas Vineyard. She and Mr. Hornblower have visited at White Sulphur Springs, and from there Mrs. Hornblower went to Marthas Vineyard She has not yet opened her beautiful home at 7 Louisburg sq., as she is a great lover of outdoor life and likes to spend as much time as possible in the country. She is at present at her Plymouth home. Messrs. Ralph and Harry Hornblower are at Milton this year and Miss Martha Hornblower is with her mother at Plymouth.

High Collar

A LADY OF CHARM AND distinction is Miss Eleonora Sears of Boston and the North Shore. Wherever she goes she is the center of an admiring group. Her smile is one of the rare variety that always, includes and enlivens the group about her. She always dresses with individuality of taste and distinction. She looked attractive lately at the hunter trials at A. S. Good in a beautiful estate in her gray suit coat with a high collar and a felt sport hat with a modish brim.

An they young lady of distinction and great charm, who is always to be found intensely interested in all sporting events is Mrs. Robert Almy. She is a noted horsewoman. She looked exceedingly well the other day in her dark grey sport coat and a smart felt hat with a matching buckle in the front and her fur coat cut at the stylish hip length. The coat was soft tan. Mr. Almy has hazel eyes and light hair.

Mrs. William Coburn of Chestnut Hill and the North Shore is engaged in the dramatic activities of the Romans City Club. Mrs. Coburn has a very beautiful voice and marked dramatic ability.

Speaking of young ladies with charm and marked ability, there is Miss Constance Brett daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Chester Brett of Brookline. She has brown hair waved becomingly back from her face and falling low in her neck. She has thoughtful dreamy eyes and a pensive and interesting expression. She looks well in her black velvet evening gown with a low neck and three enchanting old fashioned puffy sleeves.

Miss Helen Idell Heads Ushers

Miss Helen C. Idell will be one of the head ushers at the cabaret for the Brookline Friendly to be held at the Town Hall tomorrow.

The affair is the climax of a series of parties during the day for the same charity, which includes a luncheon at noon, a card party in the afternoon under the direction of Mrs Horace Soule, with a candy table and food table for the convenience of the players.

Mrs. C. C. Boyden is the general chairman, and Miss Dorothy Miner is the chairman of the cabaret committee with Mrs Frank A. Pemberton as vice-chairman.

Dance at Junior League Planned

Invitations have gone out for an entertainment to be called the "Zero Hour Dance," which is to take place in the ballroom of the Junior League Club, Zero Marlborough st., the night of Dec. 2.

The event has been arranged by the committee composed of Miss Katherine Balch, Miss Saran Shurcliff, Miss Margaret Howe Mrs. Trygve Gunderson. Miss Junia Bright, Miss Sarah Dodge Miss Louise Hopkins and Miss Katherine Powers, for the benefit of the Judge Baker Foundation.

Books---And a Number of Things

By CHARLES HANSON TOWNE

The boy, Fred Blake, in Somerset Maugham's new novel, "The Narrow Corner" (Doubleday, Doran), says to Dr Saunders toward the end of the story.

"I don't want you to think I'm conceited God knows I've got nothing to be conceited about But you know, I've always been able to get any girl I wanted to. Oh I'm not sure I was a sex fiend. I don't see why I shouldn't have all the fun I could get."

* * *

Far East Setting

And around that idea the book revolves Not so much the predatory male, but the sought-after male, weakly allowing himself to be the victim of the women he encounters

"You should put a little vitriol on your handsome face," said the doctor to the lad after he had heard the confession. "You are certainly a public danger." It was said ironically, of course; and Fred Blake was quick to see that. "Oh don't sneer at me," he said.

* * *

Again, as in "The Painted Veil" and other of his books, Mr. Maugham goes to the Far East for his setting; and he picks up strange tales, with strange people enacting their parts in them He bids us look out on far horizons, where anything may happen if has, more than any story-teller I can think of today, the gift of quietly building up a situation leading one to a climax of unbelievable power As we look back, we wonder how he has achieved this approach to the culminating incident. We are hardly conscious of our leisurely companionship with him Nothing much occurs in the earlier chapters of this book; but somehow we are carried along, drinking in the atmosphere of the lazy days, and when the secret of the boy Fred Blake's life is hinted at, we rouse ourselves and plunge along, knowing, if we know our Maugham at all, that a smashing climax will be the logical ending

We meet up with Blake at the doctor encountered him, by accident; and we go aboard the boat with him and Capt. Nichols, one of the best drawn characters Maugham has yet given us, a wretched old fellow who suffers from indigestion, swears atrociously, is cruel and vindictive, and is later, at Mrs. Hudson's suicide, capable of all the devility of which Dr. Saunders suspects him before the final curtain is rung down It is obvious from the start that young Blake is fleeing from some event in his past far off in Sydney.

When the curious trio land in the Malay Peninsula, a young Dutch fresh and vigorous with fine mind, one Eric Christesach, is encountered; an aloof and lonely man, seemingly unable to adjust himself to his surroundings. And then the girl, Louise, the daughter of a planter, appears, "like an enchantress in an old tale whom men loved to their destruction" Her unearthly beauty has appealed to the solemn Dane, and after many days he confides to the doctor that he is engaged to the girl Meanwhile, Blake has struck up a deep friendship with Eric; and, to his credit, it must be said that he does not suspect the engagement. He wanders off with Louise, and the inevitable happens.

* * *

Fight in the Dark

Eric, returning unexpectedly, discovers Blake leaving the girls balcony. There is a fight in the darkness on the boy lying in the ground Then, as in the talkies, there is a sudden fade-out, and it is not until later that we learn of the Dane's tragic death by his own hand It is the doctor who reveals to Blake the true state of things, and because of the condition of his nerves, Fred Blake takes Dr. Saunders wholly into his confidence and bit by bit unfolds to him the hideous story of his flight from Australia A woman back there fifty years older than he, had literally seduced him, having madly fallen in love with him.

It is when Maugham gets to this part of his narrative that he writes with bitterness. Nothing could be more melodramatic than the way Mrs Hudson forcing the lad to return to her after he had wearied of her tenderness. They are discovered together by the big-hand The boy finds himself with a pistol in his hands It has been placed there by the wife. There is a shot, and the man lies dead.

Blake's father, to whom the boy has confessed, manages to get him safely away, and we hear vaguely, later, of Mrs. Hudson's suicide,

Only a writer as skilful as Maugham could make all this probable He proves that the attractive male is often as pursued as an attractive female, that a sinister fate can follow him as it follows a woman and proves his full from the mid- of M Aurelius Shor the more is man's life, and narrow the corner of the earth where he dwells.

* * *

A Sinister Fate

If toward the end he preaches a little too much, you will find his preaching good. Even the girl Louise, phlegmatic after her lover's death, in speaking of her old grandfather, can say:

"Old age is very strange It has a kind of aloofness It is lost so much that you can hardly look upon the old as quite human any more But sometimes you have a feeling that they've acquired a sort of new sense that tells them things that we can never know."

And when Blake asks the doctor what he believes, the latter replies:

"Do you really want to know? I believe in nothing but myself and my experience The world consists of me and my thoughts and my feelings, and everything else is mere fancy Life is a dream in which I create the objects that come before me Everything knowable, every object of experience, is an idea in my mind, and without my mind it does not exist."

It is a strange, eerie tale, but it will hold your interest from first to last.

Vanity Wrecks Marriages More Often Than Success or Fame of Wife

By MARGUERITE MOORS MARSHALL

WHEN THEY GAVE Amelia Earhart a medal in Bryant Park, the first woman to make the Atlantic solo flight chose to end her graceful speech with the following undoubtedly truthful compliment to her husband George Palmer Putnam.

"I want to pay a tribute to Mr Putnam. It was much easier for me to go than for him to be left behind."

That charming, modest, merry crowned Miss Earhart first European interview which she admitted "scared" her couldn't decide on any plans till Eve talked with my husband and also her interviews with New York ship news reporters to which she even more nervous, admitted that the best part of her record making flight was the honeymoon up back on the farm with her husband.

STILL SKEPTICS

Here seemed to be a [illegible] that [illegible] SKEPTICS about the marriage of [illegible] NOT spoil the one he [illegible] and her man.

"Oh, yeah?" there were "still skeptics to challenge, however. "But how do you suppose"—this ness of a heavily sneering smile —"MR. EARHART feels about it?

Maybe it's O. K. by him, this having a wife who puts him plenty in the shade—but maybe, too, HE thinks it's not so hot."

An article in a current issue of a monthly magazine tells how Amelia Earhart's spouse should play the role of "forgotten husband." And if you read between the lines of the article you will recognize that a "forgotten husband" is the good sportsmanship the thrilling devotion, the sense of humor if George Palmer Putnam is married whom his friends call "Mr. Amelia" however he may [illegible] image.

It's really not bad to be Amelia Earhart's husband' call him doctor Mr Putnam's. Not bad a bit! Especially when both of us see the humors of the situation. Naturally, I am prejudiced, but A. E. does seem to me a particularly good sport."

He adds that both he and his wife also recognize that "the shoes on the other foot for such a [illegible] would be a fair enough [illegible] to be offered on the altar of [illegible] superiority." And he winds up in the same fix as overjoyed wives of famous men!

THE SOLUTION

Seriously, what is the explanation of the happy adjustment in this particular case—against which must be set the Ann Hardings' Harry Bannister split and many another marriage, in and out of motion pictures, which has gone to smash on the rock of the wife's greater fame or financial gain?

[illegible] seems to be pretty generally conceded by Mr Putnam when he tells of Amelia Earhart's annoyance at any suit or slight upon him and her insistence on independence in all matters even the most minor men her of the team.

If a husband and wife truly love each other it isn't her success or fame which will separate them. It's excess VANITY—hurt vanity on his part, swollen vanity on hers. When he's big enough to forget his own self in loving admiration for her success when she is big enough to forget her success in loving admiration for him that magic [illegible] is healed intact. And it can be for both of Amelia Earhart and George Palmer Putnam.

Begin It Today: 'THREE WOMEN,' a New Serial by Faith Baldwin

Louisa Shouts Song of Joy Over Son

THE STORY SO FAR

Mrs. Louisa Lennox Sheldon was wed,ward in the middle 90's when she was already obsessed with love of her nine year-old son Lennox. They live in sedate but prosperous Victorian style in the family home on Washington Sq., New York city. Leaving his husband, up through 12 and even thereafter, Lennox is in the idolatrous but coldly conservative mould of his mother, who bans kissing games, keeps him from rough companions, takes him abroad with her, and does everything she can to make him a duplicate of that current ideal, Little Lord Fauntleroy. She never approved the gay and flirtatious ways of his father, whom she had married after her sister had mercilessly eludes his pursuit. She was determined their boy would be different. So, Lennox would not go to Harvard, as his father intended; she would not let her "girl" out of her sight for any such length of time. Lennox has his first fight with another boy, one Sally Martin. He dreams of Sally.

NOW CONTINUE

Lennox dreamed. Girls should be a mystic race, there and gone, like wraiths of golden hair, who should have warm small fingers and dimples to the aft of pink lip curling mouths . . . like Sally.

You can drag a boy's soul as wonder. The man pulled up in a leather armchair in the smoking corner of the library had dipped a dangerous magic. If Jean Lafitte enslaved the pirates with his eyes, followed them his determined mouth formed them to lenty.

"My heart aches and a drowsy numbness pain
My sense, as though of hemlock I had drunk."

His mother came in her long black silk dress. As usual, she never made a needless impression.

"Come, Lennox. Is your hair brushed?" Stand up, do. You will ruin your eyes. Hurry, the carriage is waiting."

Church bells. He crept sad and sad, her shoulders stooped under the weight of the Sunday prayer. One hand endeavored to order its rebellious crest. His blue eyes fired appealingly about the drab room. Even his sharply cut nostrils drew in gratefully the cold English scent of books of worship.

Louisa Sheldon turned from about with a quiet and hand. She dismissed him off with an air of still a easy sweet and a look of surprise disapproval that had no name. And Keats, picked up and shut in separately into the appointed gap. He shelf and said a few pointed sentences. "You could annoy me, our Sunday mornings here," she purposely.

He murmured. Yes, mamma, I can call." He left a little dazed, staggering about to from the dazzling twilight of his poet out into the hot sunlight of a Sunday in May.

The carriage was in the door. The wind blowing in the half. Thomas, the footman. Hopkins, the coachman, were erect upon the box. The door opened and the mistress appeared. Thomas was galvanized into action. Mrs. Shel and came down the steps, leaning her parasol on one right hand. Lennox followed her behind her.

"The Metropolitan Temple," she ordered, unnecessarily.

Then drove off. Lennox, Seventh ave

SAT UPRIGHT

Louisa sat upright. Once she said, sharply, "Don't slouch so, Lennox." And Lennox pulled himself into a more conventional posture. He was sleepy, dreary from too much late breakfast, drowsy from the hour over the Kreutzer.

They had arrived. Lennox watched his mother's gloved wing by head to his or that person. He watched off his hat in a panic lest he sp bear behind in emotion. A sermon in robins egg blue halted him as they entered the door with Monsoon whispered, "You're coming to supper—"

Her girl danced from under the ridiculous lifted hat. Her eyes were veiled by demurest lashes. Something troubled his heart, and suddenly the sunlight was amazing. He blinked at the abrupt transition as he followed his mother into the dark caves of the church. An organ swelled from pleading into command. There was colored light.

His head bowed, he sat beside his mother while she prayed. The church was full of restless sounds, the scraping of men's shoes, the rustle of women's dresses. The tall man in the pulpit was speaking. What was he saying so confidently?

IN THE CHURCH

"Those people gathered in Thy House, Oh, Lord . . . be Thou with us today . . ."

Lennox thought dimly . . . God in this church? In all the churches?

His thoughts swung to Sally Morgan. They would have Sunday supper with the Morgans tonight. His mother had said nothing to him, she never did. She ordered, when the time came. "Come, Lennox," or "Go, my son." He wondered, with a little spurt of resentment, what she would say, how look, if he ventured to make, to carry out, a plan on his own account. What was she playing about? He stole a look at her. Her strong profile was carved from tinted stone. He, thin lips pursed.

Sally. God in His House. Lennox's thoughts swung between the two.

The church was crowded. It was very warm. Lennox could smell the odor of clean humanity, of soap

'A MAN MUST FIGHT'

By Gene Tunney

Roche Manages Tunney; Few Matches

SYNOPSIS

Thus far, the author has described his strenuous boyhood, New York high club activities, and battles paving the way toward the A. E. F. boxing championships in France. Offers boy, ship company mate clerk, life saver, and now a soldier-hard U. S. Marine, Tunney leaves for Paris for leave and shortly winning the championship title on April 28, 1919. Decides to defeat Dempsey some day! Smiles and laughs over this letter. Gene joins the Army of Occupation, returns to the U. S. is discharged, practically broke; from the service and remains broke until he is signed through the good offices of Sammy Kelly, Jack Denning, Bartley Madden, and Bernard F. Gimbel.

By GENE TUNNEY

I wanted to fight. I was in fighting shape. I expressed the desire for work to Sammy Kelly several times. Sammy made no promises but as there was no boxing in New York state at that time Sammy found it most difficult to place me. I was impatient. I wanted action. To appease me Sammy offered me money in advance. As he had already advanced me $100 it did not seem wise to get into the increasing partnership indebtedness. I refused any proffer but insisted on his procuring me matches.

Eventually Charles A. Stoneham came to Sammy. He was wanting him to [illegible] He [illegible] a big fee. A couple of bouts had. PLYMOUTH'S REVIEW

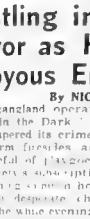
"Whistling in the Dark" Wins Favor as Humorous and Joyous Entertainment

By NICHOLAS YOUNG

While gangland operations are not much to brag about "Whistling in the Dark," which came to the Plymouth last evening, tempered its crimes with merriment and finally sent back to warm firesides an obviously satisfied and entirely happy houseful of playgoers. Not in any of the American Theater Society's subscription offerings has there been rolled into one evening so much honest fun mixed with foul deeds and peopled with desperate characters. There was not a dull moment in the whole evening. There was drama and gun play, of course, but this was kept mainly in the background, it was secondary. The play gained momentum by its own delicious humors, adroitly conceived and brilliantly interpreted. The principal burden descended upon Ernest Truex, a diminutive actor that turned in a man-sized job.

• • •

The authors—the Messrs. Gleason and Carpenter—in their ambitious efforts, you may call it comedy, but it was hardly that. It was gangdom's operations with the humorous punch. But the players, who once for all undertook to burlesque gangdom, kept it so well within the bounds of good taste that one could enjoy it as a good farce in the first act, rather than as a mere effort. It was a subtle stroke, and one which gangdom headquarters, the author of scientific stories whose gift of creating just the right mixture of mystery for boob hunters, and well merited fame is compelled to make good in a real way for a band of desperate gangsters. It is a hard assignment—question, Mr. Truex when first confronted with the demand. But as settles down to work, and ends in the perfect crime with a mental single reservation. He submits tufts innocent confectioners' sugar for cyanide in the tooth paste which is to send the unsuspected victim to a hasty conclusion.



Ernest Truex

• • •

The narrative is as simple as that. Its variations, however, fairly glitter with all the good old humor of yesterday's melodrama and are veneered with the humors most of us have been waiting for all season with extended arms. Mr. Truex was no physical hero, but he kept you in excellent humor—at times in almost undignified hilarity. With all its threatened disaster to the bashful little author and his girl friend, the latter played bravely by Claire Trevor, there was never a moment when the tenseness of the drama dampened its frivolities. It was joyous entertainment.

• • •

Miss Trevor was a comer in her own right. Her work was subdued in the atmosphere of suspense and appeal. There was nothing heroic about her nursing of a quick wound. Little to do in the end, if not a sick room was a smile in every gesture he made—and there were some hearty laughs also to keep you shaking in your seat. Miss Trevor was more direct, a forward going girl that more than once bewildered her captor. On the gangland sidelines Robert Gleckler and Ralph Theodore played hard and fast. But even they brought forth bits of humor that lifted the performance. Among the minors of distinction were Martha Mayo, Charles Halton and Averill Harris. Each of these made ample contribution to the performance.

"Whistling in the Dark" is gangland drama with the teeth extracted. It fairly laughs the gunman out of his chosen profession.

Camera Action Excels in "The Golden West" at the Scollay

By HARLEIGH SCHULTZ

Of all the talkies the Westerns give the Hollywood cameras the best break. In the silent days, the screen had an eloquence that was golden in its very essence. The shadows told the story, action was the cue and the imagination was whipped into activity until the onlooker became enmeshed in the lure of the lariat. The hero, in The Golden West, for four years now at the Scollay, has a hand all its own in its glorious capacity to act.

• • •

Here with all apologies to brawny George O'Brien the critical interest lies not in the film folk but in the sweeping and sweeping of the lenses over mountain and valley, in the stampeding buffaloes, the red skins at battle and other sequences thrilling by the sheer power of the camera to present the picture, beyond all power of the spoken word. Gorgeous landscapes are here, and one gets a whiff of the open spaces, with the tang of the range air.

The story in Zane Grey's yarn is best left well enough as a plot and adequately set forth by these performers. O'Brien, particularly, is given opportunity to please all his host of admirers.

• • •

Vale and Rinie Stanton, expert comedians, top the stage bill. The program is a good one, and includes "Henrietta's Affairs" with plenty of class dancing, Carl Nixon and Co. in a romantic comedy; Roger Williams in a diverting radio skit and the Beau Tans, in song and dance.

Myrna Loy is a glamorous siren in "The Mask of Fu Manchu," Cosmopolitan picture for M-G-M now featured on the screens at Loew's State and Orpheum. Miss Loy is an exotic lass with much lure.

Among the other performers are Gladys McCormack, Adele Paris, Alice Kennedy, Tip Huff, Johnny Cook, Harry Connors and Harry Ryan.

On the vaudeville program the leaders are John Quinn and co-ed Hall Sherman, one of the funniest of the funny men and a comical good skipper. Lorenz Selig and Co. present acrobatic dreams and Rogers dances. The petite co-ed is Jean Mix in Rodeo of Dance. Val and Zeda, Pete in Raring Youth.

She has been trying to get into the movies ever since the spectacular murder of Mr. Rothstein but the movies are afraid of the publicity she has received. The report is that she has settled down and is about to marry a San Francisco lawyer. Tom Carr hands over the actual producing duties of Monogram pictures to Lee Ochrow. Glad that Tom is going to keep an eye on these pictures, as they have made several excellent ones and at a very low cost. Ochrow's first picture is "The Cost of Living" by William Anthony McGuire. The paths of Jack Dakin and Sue Ryan seem forever to be crossing in motion pictures. Dakin was supposed to play the lead in "The Crime of the Century" for R. P. Schubert but you know how things change their minds, in these studios. I hope Carl Laemmle, Jack Frandzilli, Joe Engel, Jack Dakin and he had another little job in Ohio. Oh no, so Ewan was immediately put on the payroll in favor of the Century. Wanna Gibson plays opposite him.

INSPIRING INFLATION HAS ALREADY BEGUN

By B. C. FORBES

New York, Nov. [illegible] Americans are showing it already has begun to experience encouraging monetary inflation. It has become p[illegible] the question is the latest question is the logical one.

What else but monetary inflation does it mean when the United States Government can obtain short-term funds at an annual [illegible] one-quarter of one per cent.

This clearly reflects the presence of an [illegible] unprecedented supply [illegible] painfully difficult in many [illegible] safe [illegible] Large [illegible] Treasury [illegible] By [illegible] The [illegible] These [illegible] are [illegible]

[illegible] Will [illegible] present [illegible] impossible to pay important [illegible] time debts incurred in cheap dollars without destroying [illegible] debtors and insuring the [illegible] financial security of the creditor. This, however, is [illegible] of all long term debts whether domestic or foreign.

If we are called upon to save debtors, as good Americans and good business people, our first obligation always [illegible] is to save American debtors first. They, at least, contribute, to the upkeep of the government and are definite cash users for the products of our labor and industry. Outstanding foreign debts, important as they are represent less than 10 per cent of our domestic long term debts, all of which are in real pesos. It behooves us, therefore, not to give the former prior attention.

"Save American long term debtors first!" should be our slogan."

[illegible] A commend to the attention of Messrs. Hoover and Roosevelt and other politicians engaged with the responsibility of dealing [illegible] overtures pointing in from Britain [illegible] and other foreign debtors.

BUSINESS GAIN IS MORE THAN SEASONAL

By FRANK H. MELTON

Indices combine to show that the business gain of summer and fall has been more than seasonal. One leading Boston and New York investment house [illegible] and retail Christmas trade.

"Probable repeal of the Vol-stead Act and more favorable prospects for a sales tax add to hopes for successful handling of the government deficit. Finally, it is evident that the early July there has been impressive business improvement, which was maintained longer than seasonally, thus giving promise of a more far-reaching recovery next spring."

Many of us recall when Henry [illegible] have the boys out of the trenches by Christmas." And a little later declaring, "John Barleycorn is marching back [illegible] 'When Johnny Comes Marching Home Again' and the slogan will be 'Beer for Christmas' [illegible] a picturesque word as events sweep past.

LEADERS RALLY, WITH WHEAT AGAIN FIRM

New York, Nov. 15—Constructive factors threw a measure of support into the stock market in Wall St. today after light recessions had been recorded in the forenoon trading, and maximum gains of one to two or more points appeared for a number of pivotal shares.

A firm tone in the wheat pits improved sentiment. In dull trading Owens Illinois Glass, beer bottle makers, and J. I. Case ran up 2 or more points.

MUCH IRREGULARITY

There was considerable irregularity shown as prices bounced and filled. In the early trading U. S. Steel had sagged a point, but made recovery later. At the same time issues up a point or so included Allied Chemical, American Can, American Telephone, Union Pacific and Southern Pacific.

Drug was an isolated weak spot, losing more than two points.

The number of impending dividend actions evidently made traders hesitant, although the principal one of the week, American Telephone's tomorrow, was expected to usually well-informed quarters to bring another regular quarterly payment of $2.25 a share, but there was some uncertainty about it.

What is, of course, more important than dividends is corporate earnings. The ordering of dividend disbursements not fully earned appears to have lost its erstwhile salutary effect upon the market.

Washington Drug, Inc., evidently reflected the filing of a petition for a receiver for Louis K. Liggett Co., although it has been known for weeks that reorganization was contemplated, if more favorable rentals were not granted under the present leases. The oil shares held to a narrow range.

"GAS" IS MARKED UP

While Standard of N. Y. advanced gasoline prices, preliminary estimates indicated a sizable increase in crude production last week. The production problem, however, has become decidedly less threatening, with the enactment of a new proration law in Texas.

An item of interest bearing on the international financial situation was Germany's report of its foreign trade for October, showing an excess of exports over imports of 84,000,000 marks, unchanged from September.

The export surplus for October of last year, however, amounted to 383,000,000 marks. The sharp shrinkage in the Reich's favorable balance of trade has complicated its problem of maintaining payments on external debt.

Prices in the bond market again displayed an irregular trend, but trading in most categories was almost at a standstill during the greater part of the session.

United States government bonds generally marked time, apparently awaiting announcement by the treasury regarding new financing for next month. In December there is a Federal maturity of more than $600,000,000 of 3¼ per cent notes. The new issue, or issues, may be considerably larger than this owing to additional treasury requirement. In some quarters it was expected the treasury might decide to try out a long-term offering owing to the fact that the present floating debt is thought to be rather unwieldy.

Total of $16,386,000 face amount of New York, Chicago & St. Louis, Railway (Nickel Plate) 6 per cent notes, which went into default on their maturity date, last October having been deposited or promised for deposit under the refunding plan, it was announced today.

Extend Conde Nast Offer of Exchange

Conde Nast Publications, Inc., has notified holders of its three-year 6 per cent notes, due December 15, that its exchange offer of September 15 had been extended to December 8. About 70 per cent of the notes have been deposited. Noteholders were warned that the corporation faces the possibility of receivership if the plan of refunding the maturing notes does not become operative.

The offer would give noteholders first mortgage 6½s in equal principal amount and $100 in cash on each $1000 notes.

Colombia Denies It Favors Bond Group

New York, Nov. 15—Claims made by a recently formed group to represent bondholders of the Republic of Colombia that it had the official approval of that government was denied to be unwarranted, and unofficial by Consul-General German Olana here. He reported his government has taken no steps regarding the organization of a bondholders committee nor has it endorsed any such movement.

Cons. Retail Stores October Sales Off

New York, Nov. 15—Consolidated Retail Stores reports sales in October totaled $1,439,260, as compared with $1,720,325 in 1931. Sales for the 10 months amounted to $12,245,059, as against $15,7566,212 in the first 10 months of the preceding year.

Snapshots at Random!

Among the interesting spots of town is Columbia Circle, where nightly the fiery orators gather their disciples about them and preach religious or economic salvation, physical redemption (just the rubber hand, twenty times, and follow instructions, ladies and gents) or political readjustment . . . You're always sure of a free show, rain or shine, and if you want a little extra fun, just heckle the speaker . . . Wednesday night, about 100 people were collected around a small Salvation Army band listening to the musical exhortations of the woman singer . . . Twenty or thirty feet away was a larger group enrapt in the atheistic theories being expounded by a semi-baldheaded genius, with a thin little farther a still larger group lent its collective ear to a gesticulating, thunder-voiced Communist speaker . . . Suddenly, this last group, the orator having completed his phillipic moves toward the Salvation Army gathering, swelling the ranks to flattering proportions.

The lass, in a sweet treble, sings out, "Will you come to Jesus?" whereupon the Communistic recruits, as if by a prearranged signal, shout back in unison, "No!" . . . The girl steps short, blushes furiously, and seizing the American flag, begins beating about her, striking left and right—and then, realizing that she had violated both a religious and patriotic principle, stops short, and in a trembling voice, moans, "I didn't mean to do it—I honestly didn't mean to do it" and weeps.

Thursday night at the Strand Theater to inspect the widely discussed film, "I Am Suing on From a Chain Gang," with Paul Muni . . . A powerful indictment of the barbaric penal system still existing in certain Southern States . . . A lass near me shudders as the scenes of the rebellious brutality unfold, but suddenly snickers when, in one episode, the colored prisoners, shackled to each other, chant spirituals as their sledge hammers lift and fall in pandemonium . . . "They would have to spoil it by making it ridiculous" . . . But this was the truest shot of all, for the chain gang crazes encourage the colored prisoners singing—even force them to sing—on the theory that singing prisoners work harder and have less time to devote to nutritious thoughts . . . Monday night in Manhattan's newest nite-spot "Club Richelot . . . formerly the Club Richman . . . Esmond O'Brien entering, inquires "Is this the Club Richman?" to which the doorman replies, "No, sir, this is the Richelou" (pronouncing it Richelieu) . . . O'Brien snickers and murmurs, "Don't tell me Richman's reformed and become a cardinal" . . . Inside, Ed Lewis wanders around, evidently looking for some one . . . Nils T. Granlund sits solemnly with Rose Wenzel at his side and for once doesn't bark us to discuss either his farm or his new place . . . in another room at a long table, cluster Harry Richman, Bert Lahr, George Woods and others, cackling as Irving Cesar pours out one yarn after another . . . The following night in the same place, Ted Lewis and Sophie Tucker dancing.

Tuesday night and the gaily apparelled citizenry trooping down in the cold drizzle to inspect "Music in the Air"... What the newspaper reporters like to call a "gala" opening. Marie Dressler is there looking unusually weary and sitting with her is Cissie Loftus... Later at the Place Pigalle, where again I hear the tragic story of Dick Cinderero, who was to have led the orchestra after months in which the breaks had gone against him...On the very eve of the opening he was run down by an auto and left on the street, with two fractured legs and other injuries...In desperation he summons Harry Rosenthal, a pal of long standing, and Rosenthal volunteers to take his place until he recovers, turning over the entire salary check to him...But the management has already hired some one else, and so Rosenthal's generous gesture is discounted and Gasparro has one more bad break...Which reminds me that another one-time popular orchestra leader is destitute and desperately ill—Al Jeckers...Monday night we trot down to the Village Barn to attend Gus Van's debut as a chief entertainer...There we find Ted Weller, the lad who stole all the notices when "Americana" opened...Nick Lucas strums his guitar and chants three tender lullabies, and by way of contrast, Toy Gong, the Celestial Bishop of Chinatown, takes a bow.

At El Garron, Thursday night, Eleanor Ambrose, until recently the wife of Sam Katz, vice-president house monarch . . . There is still some talk to the effect that friends are trying to effect a reconciliation between the pair . . . Russell Johns, fresh from England, sings a number that has something about "You're got me hot and bothered," but makes up for it by warbling a couple of recent numbers, and Fontana and the wholesomely beautiful Anna Ludmila spend five minutes convincing a night club audience that, after all, there is nothing so erotically inspiring as ballroom dancing . . . Earlier in the week at the Montparnasse, where John Hilbert and Wheeler Dryden break into giggles over some of the insane numbers sung by the Yacht Club Boys . . . Sam Shipman explains why it costs him exactly $2.50 for a single cup of coffee in this particular restaurant . . . "$1.50 to taxi down and back from my hotel. A quarter tip to the door man. A quarter tip to the hatcheck man. And a quarter for the tip to the waiter. And a quarter for the cup of coffee" . . . At an isolated table sit Louis Calhern and Natalie Schaefer absorbed in each other . . .

Wednesday night at the Gypsy Trail a Hungarian restaurant where a bell-lean lad with dark, dreamy eyes, draws his bow tenderly over his violin and lures forth divinely melancholy Hungarian melodies . . . Thursday night at Pavo's . . . Joe Lewis settles down at our side and reads off a new song which has something to do with being misunderstood but when I see the difference?—here is coming back . . . "The fellow wants a $100 for it!" Dr. Richard Lief offers to write two just as bad with a few extra rhymes thrown in for the same money . . . Okay . . . replies Joe. "If you'll throw in a free extraction and two gold fillings" . . . Friday night, Bill Bell with chills . . . Saturday morning—in bed with chills and fever . . . Saturday night, Bill Bell with chills and fever, a headache and coughs . . . Sunday—in bed with chills, fever, headache, coughs and a three-days' beard . . . Snapshots . . . The Album of Manhattan.

Family Gets Note From Kidnaped Boy

New York, Nov. 15 (AP)—Police disclosed that the parents of Paul Marciante, 10, who was kidnapped last Monday while on his way to school, had received word from the boy. A special delivery letter, mailed in Brooklyn Monday night, read:

No More 'Witch Burnings'

Fanaticism Is Out of Style

Reasonable men and women—that means the great majority—will find infinite satisfaction in the new deal that dry law violators are getting in many parts of the country since the election.

Here are a few samples of the more rational attitude that judges and officials are taking as a result of the vote on November 8:

DETROIT—Declaring it would be "ridiculous to jail a violator after the people have spoken so convincingly," Judge W. McKay Skillman has suspended sentence on William Munn, charged with violation of the State Prohibition Act, and said he would follow the same policy on all prohibition cases coming before him.

William A. Comstock, Democratic Governor-elect, said that "if it is legally possible" he would release all violators from prison.

A proposal to eliminate the bone-dry clause from the State Constitution was adopted overwhelmingly Tuesday.

SACRAMENTO—Amnesty for 500 persons now serving prison sentences for violation of the State dry law is being considered by Governor James Rolph, Jr.

The dry law was overwhelmingly repealed at the polls.

CHICAGO—Mayor Anton Cermak says: "Chicago brewers need not wait for the repeal of the State's Search and Seizure Act. The Police Department will not enforce it so far as beer is concerned."

* * *

No doubt a Philadelphia lawyer could point out legal flaws in this procedure, but to ninety-nine Americans out of a hundred it looks like the height of wisdom.

Beer will be legal this Winter or next Spring.

The Eighteenth Amendment will be repealed.

In view of these facts what earthly excuse is there for sending a lot of technical offenders to jail and keeping them there at the expense of bankrupt State treasuries?

With ten million workers wondering where their next meal is coming from it is criminal to waste money in attempts at enforcing a repudiated law.

* * *

And another thing—the new attitude toward prohibition cases indicates an end of the fanaticism that has kept this country for the last twelve years in a condition verging on civil war.

The blind intolerance that characterized much of our "law enforcement" is dying out or is already dead.

The modern "witch-burners" are as out of date as their forebears of old Salem who hanged their victims.

The people have declared themselves for a return to kindliness, calmness and common sense.

Our country was founded on those principles.

Last week we got back to them.

It was high time.

The End of Cooks

Thanks to the discovery of vitamines, there is now another learned calling—that of dietitians. They are the experts who say how much calories, protein, carbohydrate and vitamines should be doled out to us.

Eight hundred of these experts held a conference in New York last week, and after the science talks they rushed out to dine in lairs where the provender was chow-mein, chopsney, borscht, matzoth, ravioli, goulash, arroz con pollo and probably Scotch haggis.

Even dietitians like real food for a change. No real gourmet ever worries about the exact proportion of fat soluble A in his salad or whether the oyster he swallows yields him four calories to the gramme or ten per cent of protein instead of twelve. Not so long as it tastes good and leaves room for something more. And he wants to feel the place is a restaurant and not a nutrition laboratory.

Anyway, the science is advancing. Eaters in future may demand that an egg be not only fresh but contain 6.5 grammes of protein and 5 of fat. Three more vitamines are on the verge of discovery, and life will be more complicated than ever. Kitchens will be presided over not by fat cooks but by lean dietitians peering through microscopes.

It is to be hoped they will cut the cold beef thick, but probably they won't; so instead of ordering one sandwich we shall have to order two.

Grief on the Bosphorus

Turkey is finding out that to be modern has its drawbacks. The women have been freed of the veil and the burden of the old customs. There are no more secluded harems. The tired Turkish Rabbit, coming home from a hard day at the office, may find the house empty and all the wives lounging in Lido pajamas on the sands of the Bosphorus, or joy-riding somewhere, or dancing at some roadhouse with gigolos.

Then the poor Turk has had to learn to write his language in new script, like ours. He is not allowed to wear the fez any more, and must wear snap-brims or derby hats.

Even worse is the ukase issued this week that Turks must all take family names inside of six months. They must not be listed any more as plain Mahmud or Hussein, but Mahmud-el-Robinson or Hussein-el-Smith.

It may help telephone service a little, but the tax-gatherers a great deal more.

Needed—Good Manners

Bishop Lawrence says that the country needs good manners. Courtesy is a word for it; the outward manifestations of inward grace and gentility.

"Courtesy," an ancient writer put it, "wins women as well as valor."

Tennyson said, "The greater the man, the greater his courtesy."

Our own Emerson observed, "Life is not so short but that there is always enough time for courtesy."

The young people who dive into the subway cars between 5 and 6 o'clock would learn that courtesy has some practicable value if they had time to read the life of Wentworth, the Colonial Governor of New Hampshire. He married his housemaid, "because she possessed the gentle art of courtesy." And he compelled the ladies of the court to make obeisance to her. And like it.

Now That Election's Over

Glibly the Wizard of the East
Pronounced his incantation.
And from his magic box released
The specter, Cancellation.
Wrapped in a golden haze, it swam
Before the gaze of Uncle Sam.

Somehow, the magic failed to thrill
The heart of Uncle Sam.
He pondered on the Wizard's skill,
As cheerful as a clam.
"A gold brick by another name,"
He said, "will always be the same."

—George E. Phair.

New York Day by Day

Hard Season for Actors

NEW YORK, Nov. 15—While theatrical agencies shrink to astonishing minimum, a few carry on. None is so hopelessly brave in disaster as actor folk. Day after day, they drift to remaining waiting rooms, the girls, all airs and graces. The men, never jobless but "at liberty."

There is little employment and scarcely point in seeking it, but the vision of fame and the handful of lights still blazing bolster sagging hopes. Even today, one still may come upon an actor of comic paper tradition, with nose of red and collar of Astrakhan.

Tragedians, whose ambitious argosies foundered long ago, with a speakeasy shot will expand, thrust an arm, Napoleon like, in tattered coat, and exclaim: "When I played with Mansfield—" In the worst season the theater ever knew, the Lambs is the most cheerful club in town.

The actor does not realize his is a heartless, overcrowded profession. His superb belief in himself and future never dims. Tremulous girls, from prairie cottages and village streets, wash their one pair of stockings nightly, and each morning are eager for a new joust with fate.

In a waiting room, I saw the usual group. One flashing-eyed maid you felt sure had been told she looked like Grace Allen. An old man with the face of a judge. A youth cut to a hero. A plump mother with dancing twins. The usual quota of vague people. All dreaming in a heart-break house!

* * *

From a Paris bedroom window recently, I looked daily on the shimmer of glass that was Ivar Kreuger's top-loft elysium. And, last evening from Kent Cooper's eyrie, I saw Kreuger's penthouse perched high at 73d and Park ave. Others occupy it, and, on a terraced plot, a nurse watched a child at play. But what registered, in a mind that blots up only inconsequentials, was the surrounding shrubbery — weeping willows.

* * *

Somewhere, I hear, too, that Eugene O'Neill is America's greatest literary sulker. Anything but extravagant praise for his work sends him to a remote cloister where he sits hours in dour pout, perhaps a-liking in trilogies. We had a notion Theodore Dreiser, rocking and twisting his handkerchief into an anguished ball, held the record. We commend to each of the boys, a columnist's week-end mail as a cure. In a few weeks, if they haven't stepped off a dock's deep end, they will realize, at least, "they can take it!" And that's something in any language.

Achieving no greatness writing—(Sudden scream: He's telling us!)—my sympathy for temperament among belles-lettres runs tepid. I see no reason why pursuit of literature entitles one to rudeness or a puff of divine afflatus. Every period has more good writers than earnest readers. Too many scribblers are poseurs, simulating something they never will be. Their trouble is not always artistic, but, rather, pathological. My fun is plugging away on the sidelines and, at rare intervals, turning out a paragraph that embers the glowing thought: "That's not so bad!" This is about as pleasant a victory as I've medicity offers.

My admiration for Michael Arlen, aside from his deft bizarrerie, is in his sheer joy of being alive. A jack-in-the-box, perpetually on spring, he became a lion of the London drawing rooms, left it for St. Moritz, captured the skiing circles there, and moved on to Paris and the Riviera. He mad enough money to provide an annuity, so he writes when the mood grips. The rest of the time he thrills to living, instead of glooming in a corner, wondering how long popularity will last.

* * *

It just occurs, I do not know a writer who looks the part. Doctors, lawyers, actors, bankers, generally run to type. But the only writer who ever looked to me "like his writings" is Arnold Bennett.

* * *

However, Clarence Budington Kelland is the sort of fellow you would easily imagine is known to all intimates as "Rud." And no one, after a good look at a certain writer, would jump from under a hat to hear him called "Odd."

Listen, World!

By Elsie Robinson

The Working Wife

ARE MEN going to the dogs because women are going into jobs?

A "Worried Mother" wondered—with plenty of reason—for her daughter was working, and so was her daughter-in-law, and their respective partners were sitting back and taking it easier every day.

Worried Mother couldn't understand. Men hadn't been like that in her youth. A man who let his wife support him would have been the laughing stock of his community. But, nowadays, young men took a wife's job and pay check for granted; actually expected her to "do her share"; weren't a particle ashamed if she had to carry the whole load.

Elsie Robinson

Worse yet, the young women agreed—frankly acknowledged—that "marriage isn't possible unless they're both working." Yet, despite their frankness, they grew bitter in time.

Parasite husbands; peevish wives. Has marriage come to that? Worried Mother asked for answers, and in they came by the thousands. Scores of yeas; scores of nays. Here are some samples that are good for a scrap in any office, at any dinner table.

Dear Miss Robinson:

"Does a working wife spoil a husband?" In the majority of cases, she certainly does! Yet there are a few men in the world who can stand it, and I honestly believe I'm one of them. Briefly, here's my record:

Lost my job in 1927. Had an off-and-on time getting placed, but am now doing well. When my job failed, my wife secured a position in an automobile accessory place near home, which she has held ever since. The salary was small, but she was able to pay for her own and the child's clothes.

IN FAIRNESS TO HER, I WISH TO STATE THAT SHE HAS ALWAYS BEEN THE BETTER "BUSINESS WOMAN" OF THE TEAM.

Wife living at home with her parents, paying all of her own expenses for a while; I working 300 miles away, sometimes idle. There are all the makings of a tragedy in a situation like this. But how has it worked out with us? Wonderfully!

BUT PLEASE NOTE THIS—NEVER ONCE HAVE I ACCEPTED A DOLLAR OF MY WIFE'S MONEY, AND NEVER WILL. MY SALARY SUPPLIES THE COST OF LIVING, HER SALARY GOES FOR HER PERSONAL EXPENDITURES, OR EXTRA LUXUFIES, WHICH WE BOTH ENJOY.

That's how the "working wife" situation has turned out for us.

G. H. A., Charlottesville, N. C.

A mighty modern marriage, yet as successful as any sturdy oak-clinging vine combination. But it doesn't always work that way. As for instance:

Dear Elsie:

"Does a working wife spoil her husband?" I'll say she does! And I should know, for I've done that to mine. I married an "old-fashioned, chivalrous gentleman," who winced at the very thought of a woman working; but I talked him into it, and soothed his hurt pride when my salary proved the larger.

And now, after 10 years, what is the situation?

I've got to work, now. He has become a spoiled darling, and though I still persist in loving him, I have a shameful, secret knowledge that our romance would be shattered if he had to face hardship.

As for me—I hate my job! My heart is sick and empty for the children I have been unable to have; and the dollars I have earned and spent have bought us nothing but a "false front." How I wish I could start all over again! I WOULD NEVER WORK A DAY!

A Remorseful Working Wife.

So there you have 'em—yeas and nays—on the most important subject on earth.

Just Folks

The Possible Answer

Oh, we sit around our tables and we talk of this and that,
And life goes on forever in its even, solemn way.
For in spite of our inventions and the wisdom of our chat,
There's none of us can ever keep the tears of grief away.

"The cities are too crowded," says a gray-beard sage we love,
But men are fond of cities and you'll never change that whim,
Though poets sing of pastures green and opal skies above,
The youngster in the country hears the city calling him.

"The need is for employment," cries another. We agree,
But who can give employment till the people start to buy?
Of such a vicious circle who the end can clearly see?
Well, not a man impractical and soft of heart as I.

For not by laws or promises will courage come again,
And not by stocks which rise or fall will happiness return,
For the anguish of the city is the country dweller's pain,
And all men go to business for the money they can earn.

Then what may make us happy? Just the will to do with less,
To face life as we find it without whimpering or dismay,
To quit the money standard as our symbol of success
And somehow get to living in a friendlier sort of way.

Volstead Modification And When

By Claude G. Bowers

Author of "The Struggle for Democracy in America," "Founders of the Republic," "Jefferson and Democracy," "The Tragic Era" and other important works, now writing for the Boston Evening American.

THE ELECTION definitely ends the mockery of national prohibition, and it is possible, in view of the overwhelming verdict of the people, that something may be done about the Volstead Act during the short session of Congress beginning in December. However, in the enthusiasm of the moment, it is just as well to sound the warning that the men given a mandate on that subject do not go into office until in March.

The Congress which will convene in December is that old Congress that did nothing on the Volstead Act. Not a few of the members ran for Congress on a dry pledge in 1930—and they are not absolutely obligated to change until the term for which they then were elected has expired. But all the Democrats who ran in 1930 and again in 1932 were under a party pledge as to their terms beginning in March next. There is no escape from that pledge.

It is true that the verdict of the people has released all those elected dry in 1930 and would justify their vote for immediate modification, but where they have been conscientious dry they do have the technical excuse for doing nothing until their new term begins. It will not be an impressive excuse—but, in the case of some, it will serve.

* * *

Where Is the Money to Be Found?

There are special reasons why the sooner the Volstead Act is swept aside the better. We still have millions of jobless men, and the immediate modification of the Volstead Act to permit the manufacture and sale of beer would put hundreds of thousands of men to work without waiting for the Spring.

And there is another reason which may prove overpowering when the solons meet next month. One of the serious problems confronting them will be the finding of new sources of taxation to balance the budget. We heard much twaddle during the campaign about the budget having been balanced. It was not. The indications are that the year will show a deficit of at least a billion dollars. New or increased taxes on old sources must result.

Where is the money to be found? It can be found by the immediate modification of the Volstead Act with a tax on beer. It has been with a tax on beer. It will be again, and this would bring in just about the sum represented by the deficit.

Under these circumstances it would be common sense and good public policy immediately for the country to avail itself of this way out.

* * *

Under Certain Obligations

However, Congress alone cannot modify the Volstead Act to permit the manufacture and sale of beer. It can pass the modification act, but that act cannot become a law until it has been approved by the President, unless he sees fit to permit it to become a law without his signature.

There is absolutely nothing on the record that would justify the conclusion that President Hoover would sign such a bill. He certainly justified the impression by his action and attitude from the time of the convention until the election that he would not favor such a course. If we may judge from his public expression, his position has been that he favors a modified form of repeal of the 18th Amendment, and pending the processes of repeal he opposes any change in the Volstead Act.

But he, too, now understands the temper of the people on the subject and he can easily justify himself, if he sees fit, in changing his position on immediate modification. By doing so he would create for himself a more friendly feeling than was disclosed by the verdict of the polls, and go out gracefully.

* * *

Republicans May Join With Democrats

But after all, prohibition became hopelessly mixed up with politics and now politics should be adjourned and everyone, regardless of party or commitments no longer morally binding because of the verdict of the people the other day, should concentrate on just two things in the short session.

One is finding a way to relieve the unemployment situation.

The other is to balance the budget without increasing the already intolerable burdens of the taxpayers.

The partial solution of these two problems is plain as a pike's staff.

Even from the viewpoint of party politics, the Republicans now have no stomach for continuing their battle for prohibition. They know it is a lost cause. They know they have paid a heavy penalty for their failure to see that it was lost last Spring. They realize that the future of their party will not be served by sticking to a man and going down with the ship. It therefore seems inevitable that they will join with the Democrats on that issue. If enough of them do it would be possible to pass a modification act even over the President's veto, and, as we have said, there is every reason to assume that Mr. Hoover has seen a great light.

Modification This Winter?

If politics are to be considered the Democrats can lose nothing by having modification during the short session with the approval of Mr. Hoover. It must be quite clear to everyone that the changed situation regarding prohibition has been brought about by the gallant fight made openly and honestly by the Democrats in the recent campaign. An immediate modification would be due entirely to the success of the Democratic fight. Certainly the Democrats cannot afford for any reason, not to push modification at the earliest possible moment. But since conditions make it impossible to modify this Winter there can be a modification in the Spring. The Democrats will keep their pledge and their distinct mandate go into power.

* * *

Borah Took His Stand

There is nothing surprising in the announcement that Senator Borah will oppose modification. It is not an easy matter to understand his utter devotion to the prohibition cause. He is now familiar with the scandals and futility of national prohibition. He knows, as well as any man in public life, the necessity of increasing employment and decreasing taxes on ordinary business. But he took his stand long ago and has completely identified himself with it that it is not an easy matter to change. But even he has a sound reason for changing now.

Thus, Senator Borah is a stout champion of democracy and argues in season and out of season that the people have a right to rule. The people have spoken unmistakably. The people of Idaho have spoken. If the people have a right to rule, and Senator Borah believes they have, he cannot justify a stand, now that the people have spoken, against the public will.

His position in the campaign was one of silence. But in the closing days he came close to declaring for Mr. Hoover—and on the prohibition issue. But since then the election has been held. The verdict has been rendered. And it is against Senator Borah's position on prohibition.

AMERICAN'S HOME COLLEGE

Questions and answers prepared by members of the faculty of the College of the City of New York outline what they consider a well-educated person ought to know.

TODAY'S QUESTION

What is a bill of exchange?

This question will be repeated and answered tomorrow by Myron L. Hoch, Dept. of Economics.

YESTERDAY'S QUESTION

Does the mass of an object increase at high velocities?

Dr. F. E. Null, Instructor in Physics

The mass of a body may be defined as its property of inertia or resistance to change in motion. Thus, we would not hesitate to catch a handball, but would not care to stop an iron ball traveling toward us with the same velocity. The iron ball has greater mass than the handball; it also weighs more.

It is found that the weight of a body is directly proportional to its mass, that is, if an iron ball has eight times the mass of a wooden ball it will also be eight times as heavy.

According to the Theory of Relativity the mass and weight of a body do increase with velocity, but for ordinary speeds the effect is negligible.

The increase in mass of an airplane traveling at 120 miles per hour is approximately one part in 25,000,000,000. The change in mass of a comet in passing the sun at grazing distance with a velocity of 124 miles per second is about one part in 8,000,000.

On the other hand the change in mass becomes very great for velocities close to that of light. An electron shot out from some disintegrating radioactive substances may have a velocity exceeding 99 per cent of that of light, and will have over 7.1 times its mass when at rest.
